Hali Howard denies QC's collusion claim

Prison staff accused of aiding escape

OFFICERS at the maximum security Whitemoor Prison cut perimeter fences to help five IRA inmates and an armed obber in an escape that led to a complete review of prison security, a leading barrister claimed yesterday. Michael Mansfield, QC, accused prison guards of colludwith the IRA and demanded a new public inquiry into the breakout from the Cambridgeshire prison's special secure unit.

He was speaking after the trial of the six escapers was abandoned because of a potentially prejudicial newspape report - a decision that prompted the Home Secretary to announce moves to give prosecutors the right to appeal when judges halt proceedings. Michael Howard also demanded that Mr Mansfield produce evidence to back up his allegations, which were dismissed by the Prison Officers' Association as "completely ridiculous". Mr Mansfield, who had been defending the terrorist Liam McCotter in the trial at Woolwich Crown Court, said that corrupt or disaffected officers had cut wires on an alarmed outer fence before the prisoners reached it. He also said that four minutes of security camera film of the area was never supplied to the trial or to Sir John Woodcock's inquiry into the escape. Prison officers cut through that fence at some earlier stage and there has been a major cover-up," Mr Mansfield said. "Obviously it concerns more than one person, but how far and how high it goes it is impossible to delineate." Mr Mansfield said that at least one officer in Whitemoor's emergency control room gave evidence that he began filming as soon as the outer fence alarm sounded at 8.09pm on September 9, 1994, but no film was available to the inquiry before 8.13pm.

The prisoners would not have had time to make the 144 cuts to two fences in the few minutes of the escape, he said. "Where is the film? Our clients are not at all happy that the trial has come to an early end because they wanted this matter aired and resolved in a way that they never were able to do during the inquiry."

That had failed to interview all the officers involved, and had been used as an excuse to tighten security at all jails, he added. "Was this something where the security services set up an escape?"

But Mr Howard insisted that the escape had been thoroughly investigated and said: "If Mr Mansfield has any additional information he should certainly make it available to the police at once."

The men on trial at Woolwich were Paul Magee, 48, serving life for murder; Gilbert Macnamee, 36, serv-ing 25 years for the Hyde Park bombing, Peter Sherry, 31 and Liam O'Duibhir, 34, both in jail for life for conspiracy to cause explosions; Liam Mo-

Cotter, 33, serving 17 years for terrorist offences, and Andrew Russell, who had convictions for armed robbery and hijacking. All were charged with breaking out of prison and possessing a firearm with intent to endanger life and with intent to break prison. None will face another trial. Yesterday Mr Justice Kay beard the London Evening

Standard and its publishers Associated Newspapers issue an unqualified, unconditional apology on behalf of the Editor Max Hastings and journalist Mark Honigsbaum for the article referring to Magee's IRA links and O'Dhuibhir and Sherry's terrorist convictions that led the trial to be halted. A report will now go to the Attorney-General who will decide whether to prosecute Mr Hastings for contempt. After the hearing, Mr Hastings said: "We are desperately sorry that a piece of

The Crown Prosecution Service has not requested any such powers and it is unclear whether the measure could pass through Parliament before the general election. Prince opposed to public cash for yacht

B) VALERIE ELLIOTT WHITEHALL EDITOR

THE Prince of Wales has complained to friends that he was not consulted about the decision to replace the Royal Yacht Britannia or the timing of the announcement. It is understood he would have preferred to have seen a new yacht funded privately and to have spared the taxpayer the £60 million bill.

Ministers have claimed pri vately that the Queen herself objected to the idea of a privately funded yacht, even though at one stage it was a favoured option of senior ministers and the Treasury.

An informed source told The Times that the Oueen had voiced misgivings about "the prospect of corporate logos' on the new yacht which would have undermined the dignity of the monarchy. The Prime Minister was also said to be of the view that the yacht should be paid for by the taxpayer

Even though the Prince accepts the matter was essentially for the Government, he was concerned that the decision might backfire on the

Buckingham Paluce spokesman insisted last night that the Queen had never expressed a view about the funding of a new yacht. "The Queen has always regarded this as a matter for the Government."

Baby milk powder | Ballroom judges take steps to stamp out dirty dancing

By Ruth Gledhill

AGGRESSION on the ballroom dance floor has reached such levels that professional coaches and judges have drawn up an official "code of conduct" to stamp it out.

Complaints range from "dangerous dancing" to har-assment of judges and waltzing the wrong way round the floor. The code is a sure sign that traditional "floorcraft", in which gentlemen take care to ensure their partner is not put at risk by high-speed colli-sions, is rapidly becoming a thing of the past as the prospect of Olympic recognition draws closer. Injuries on the dance floor have reached record levels, with one top amateur only just about to return to the competition circuit after a another dancer damaged her cartilage with a high kick during the rumba.

Sainsbury's muddle up Christmas By Sarah Cunningham

A MISCALCULATION over when people wanted to buy their Christmas groceries has proved costly for Sainsbury's supermarkets. Their share value fell by 13 per cent yesterday after the group is-sued a warning that this year's profits would be well below expectations. David Sainsbury, the chairman, said: "We got wrong the weeks in which Christmas trade would come. We had two very quiet weeks and then everyone came at once." That meant huge labour costs as tills and staff stood idle in the first two weeks when customers decided not to shop early. Mr Sainsbury said that the error would cut about £5 million from the year's profits. which are now expected to be about £640 to £650 million. That compares with £712 million last year when the company recorded its first decline in 22 years. The result of the announcement was that shares fell 51p to 341p.

Report on prison escape blamed lax security

By Richard Ford HOME CORRESPONDENT

THE devastating official report into the escape of five IRA terrorists from Whitemoor jail highlighted lax security and the pampering of prisoners, who appeared to have staff at their beck and call.

Sir John Woodcock's inquiry described the escape in September 1994 as a "disaster waiting to happen" but made no suggestion that staff had colluded.

His report said that the five IRA men and an armed robber "cut a hole in the exercise yard fence, which was not alarmed, bent back the cut area allowing entry into the sterile area and access to the special secure unit security wall". The

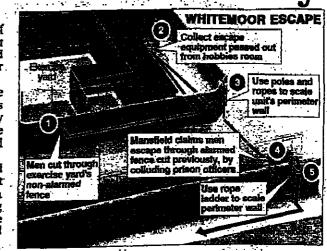

Whilst the tail-enders were still negotiating the first wall, the other escapees cut a section out of the next fence (the second wire fence, which was alarmed) and forcefully bent back the resultant flan to gain access to the sterile area, which is inside the outer wall."

Sir John's assertion that the escapers cut both wire fences was unchallenged until Michael Mansfield, QC, who was acting for one of the IRA men, made his claim yesterday. At the time of the escape many found it impossible to believe that the prisoners could have escaped from the unit, specially designed to hold high-risk inmates, without help. But Sir John's men then moved towards the outer report disclosed an appalling state of perimeter of the jail. The report adds: affairs. Searching was not carried out properly. Rub-down examinations had been suspended when a female visitor.

Much of the equipment used in the escape came from woodworking activities and other materials had been provided by well-intentioned staff members. The boltcutters used on both wire fences could have been smuggled to the men in bits. The first wire fence was not alarmed and one prison official suggested last night that it could have been cut over a number of days without officers spotting the breach. One source suggested that the camera guarding the second fence had been turned the wrong way.

EMU will hit 1999 target, says Brussels

Yves Thibault de Silguy, the European Commissioner responsible for the single currency, declared that there was "no doubt" that Europe would have its own currency on January 1, 1999, because of the "rock-solid will" of heads of government

Promising that there would be no "cooking of the books" to enable countries to meet the convergence criteria, M de Silguy nevertheless voiced optimism that a significant number of countries would be in the currency from the start. In an interview to be broadcast on GMTV's The Sunday Programme, he said that the single currency was essential for the smooth functioning of the single market.

M de Silguy was supported by Britain's senior European Commissioner, the former Tory Cabinet minister Sir Leon Brittan. He derided Tory backbench fears over joining the single currency as ridicu-lous, saying that while he supported the Government's wait-and-see policy he nevertheless believed that there were powerful reasons for ister yesterday dismissed as "completely off-beam" reports that up to 40 pro-European Tory MPs are plotting to split from the party if he loses the election and Michael Portillo succeeds him. He told reporters during a visit to his Huntingdon constituency: "It's a story that has emerged from time to time, usually without any names and has usually been denied by people in the past." Brian Wilson, Labour's campaigns spokesman, said: "It has been less than 24 hours since the Cabinet discussed Europe. Already their agreed strategy is disintegrating and John Major is once more beleaguered and exposed.

When confronted with his party's deep divisions on Europe, the Prime Minister has an extraordinary capacity to put his head in the sand "He chooses to dismiss out of hand the threat of 40 pro-Europe Tories to break away from his party. The Major motto is always the same: when in trouble, pretend it's not happening."

Kenneth Clarke, the Chancellor, was reported by close colleagues to be "perfectly relaxed" about the Cabinet's toughened line. A close friend said: "Ken is making a virtue of necessity. He has thought it increasingly unlikely that the currency will be able to go ahead . . . He is happy."

Any scare of this sort causes immediate anxiety, and the doctor's first duty is to reas-sure a worried mother that the odds of 25,000-10 make it unlikely that her apparently fit baby will have suffered. Furthermore, the mother should be told that withdrawal of the milk is a precautionary measure. As yet, no actual proven link between the cases and the milk has been made. The mother will also be happier when she knows that the organism causing this infection, Salmonella anatum, usually causes mild symptoms, so mild that only two cases have needed admission to hospital. The slogan "Breast is best" is one known to every young mother. The slogan has unfortunately caused a sense of inferiority in mothers who for some perfectly sound medical or domestic reason are unable to breastfeed. There are reasons why breastfeeding is recommended and, if it works well, there is no better method. If there are difficulties, it may well be that the baby will do just as well, or even better, on the bottle.

Breastfeeding provides the milk which has evolved for humans. Cow's milk contains more protein, and may well contain more fat. All milk-fed babies need additional vitamin D, routinely added to bottle-milk formulas. Human milk has less iron, but what it has is better absorbed.

One of the most important

Ninety per cent of women are anatomically and physio logically able to breastfeed. French viscountess wins battle for stolen candelabra

By Kathiryn Knight and Emma Wilkins

A FRENCH viscountess yesterday won her long and arduous battle to reclaim a pair of rare candelabra which were stolen from her home and then offered for sale at Sotheby's a decade later.

Mrs Justice Arden ruled in the High Court that the marble and gilt-bronze nine-branched candlebra, sent to auction by the antiques dealer Adrian Alan and worth £60,000, were the ones stolen from the chateau of Mme Nicole de Préval during a burglary in 1986.

Mr Alan, a Máyfair dealer, had told the court that he. bought them from a New York gallery two years before the burglary and claimed that they were inferior copies of the originals, made after the death of the 19th-century sculptor

Antoine-Louis Barye. But yesterday Mrs Justice Arden said it was clear that the candelbra, depicting the Three Graces, should be returned to their French home. where they had been kept for 150 years. "The evidence of Mme de Préval and her daughter in identifying the disputed candelabra and proving their provenance was in my judgment highly persuasive, " she said.

The judge added that the deciding factor must be that Mme de Préval had found on the candelabra the initials of her great-great-grandfather,

Emile Marim. The court had been told that the battle to win back the candelabra was a matter of family honour for Mme de Preval, an 80-year-old widow whose late husband, the Vicomte de Préval, fought with Bomber Command during the Second World War. She attended court every day despite speaking no English. In pre-cise French, which was translated in court, she told the judge that Barye, a favourite of the court of Louis Philippe,

She recalled how that greatgreat-grandfather, a patron of the arts, had once saved Barye from bankruptcy and the sculptor created the 3ft-high candelabra out of gratitude and friendship. The antiques bore an enamel cartouche engraved with the initials E.M. as well as Vicomte de Préval's Légion d'honneur in-The two candelabra formed part of a triptych, with a marble centrepiece depicting a mythological scene, the abduction of Angelica, a beautiful heroine, by a warrior astride a hippogriff (a labulous creature like a griffin but with the body and hindquarters of a horse).

The candlesticks were among 40 items stolen from the drawing room of Mme de Preval's second home near Sagonne, south of Paris.

For eight years she heard nothing until, in 1994, she received a telephone call from her local police, who told her that the candelabra were being offered for sale by Sotheby's in London.

Mme de Préval, who was sent a catalogue, examined the glossy photograph of the can-delabra with a magnifying glass. Recognising them immediately as her own, she was even able to see the initials on each candlestick. French police alerted Interpol and officers from Scotland Yard contacted Sotheby's. The auction was called off with just days to spare. But the auction house returned the candelabra to Mr Alan, who refused to hand them over. She decided to sue. They are of great sentimental importance to me," she told

Mr Alan, who has been dealing in antiques for 32 years and specialises in 19thcentury decorative items, said he had bought them from the Cheriff Gallery in New York. However, Mrs Justice Arden said Mr Alan's evidence contained a number of weaknesses, as there were no witnesses and a lack of documentation to corroborate his version of events. She found that he bought them after the date of the theft, for between £5,000 and £6,000.

Costs were awarded against Mr Alan, who was not present in court. His solicitor, Michael Landon, said he was disappointed with the judgment. However, it has been and remains his position that he bought the candelabra innocently and in good faith from a long established and reputable dealer in New York."

Mme de Préval was told that the candelabra would be returned when her French Neville Marvan Green, telephoned her at her Paris apartment. "It was a very emotional conversation," Mr Maryan Green said.

"She was immensely relieved and proud. She told me: 'Now I will be able to sleep again.' She has invested so much money and time and her heart into these proceedings and she feels her family history has not been betrayed."

During the proceedings, Mme de Preval told The Times: "I adored them, I can remember playing with them as a girl in my father's house. They are a part of my past and my family's history," said Mme de Préval, who has six children, "I brought this action because recovering the candelabra is a duty to my family, to my antecedents and my descendants. She now eagerly wants to reunite them with centrepiece.

AN S2-YEAR-OLD "prolific" burglar may avoid another prison sentence alter a judge ordered him to have a medical to see whether he was fit enough to go to jail. After hearing of his long criminal career, Judge Kevin Cutler told John Dean that he had "been in court more times than I have" but said he ought to be examined to see if he could cope with prison.

For his latest offence, Dear had pleaded guilty at Swindon Crown Court to breaking into the home of an elderly woman and stealing her pension and Post Office book, Dean, who was last jailed for burglary four years ago, hobbled into court and was helped into the dock by an usher.

Tom Hills, for the defence, said Dean, from Knowle, Bristol, was a "prolific" burghir. His health had rapidly deseriorated since he committed the offence in July last year. He had recently damaged his hip and was having difficulty breathing. Judge Cutler agreed to order a medical examination and told Dean: This is to see whether you are fit enough for a term of imprisonment or not."

The case, which took place : week ago, was adjourned pending the medical check-up. At his home yesterday, Dean, who claims to have more than 50 convictions for burglary and to have served time in Parkhurst, Wandsworth, and Leyhill prisons, said he had spent half his life in jail and wanted to change. He said he had been in prison so often that he could hardly remember the first time but thought it was in the late 1930s.

"I'm a terrible burglar. always got caught because I was drunk all the time," he said. "I've decided it's just not worth it. This is the last time I will ever be in trouble. I can't walk as far as the bottom of the road so how am I going to rob anyone?"

John Sweeney, an Observer journalist, was ordered to pay FF20,000 (about £2,200) in damages by the court of appeal in Rennes for remarks made during an interview he gave about the brothers on October 4, 1995, to BBC Radio

Blair puts return to work at top of welfare reforms

YOUNG people would have to take up job training and education offers or face cuts in benefit under welfare reforms set out by Tony Blair yesterday. Single mothers would be encouraged to work.

Suggesting that he intends Labour's changes to be far more radical than so far heralded, Mr Blair spoke of the party's duty, as the creator of the welfare state, to reform and even "refound" it from first principles.

Announcing a six-point plan to reduce the £10 billion a year cost of benefits for lone parents. Mr Blair hinted, however, that Labour might not go ahead with the removal of oneparent premium on benefits and lone parent benefit announced in the last Budget.He said in a BBC interview that Labour would accept the global social security budget that it would inherit if elected, but that the proposals were wrong. He suggested that his proposals for getting single parents into work would enable Labour to avoid the cuts. Labour has pledged to get

■ Change the Department of Social Security and the Employment Service so people are encouraged into work Seek to expand opportunities for people to study, for example by relaxing the "16-hour" rule for lone parents under the age of 25 and without qualifications. Under this rule, people lose benefits if they study for more than 16

250,000 young people off benefit and into work, training, education or its environmental task force. They will be offered the option a job with an employer who would get a £60 a week rebate on this cost for six months; a job with a non-profit voluntary sector employer; full-time study; or a job on the task force.

Speaking in Amsterdam,

Mr Blair said that where there was a suitable offer, people would be expected to take them up. "That is fair: rights and responsibilities go together." It is understood that young people would face a 40 per cent cut in their benefit if they did not take an offer. Mr Blair, addressing a conference on social policy, said that, under Labour, every children of school age would be invited to attend their Jobcentre for a careers interview. They would be informed about local childcare, and the party plans to promote a network of after-school clubs. *Lone parents are trapped

A greater proportion of lone mothers — 71 per cent — are dependent on state benefits in Britain than in Belgium, Denmark, France, Sweden, The Vetherlands and Germany. Just 10 per cent are dependent on such benefits in Germany. In France, 82 per cent of lone mothers work: 41 per cent do here. Pressure groups for sin-gle parents maintain that the most significant factor is the comparative lack of affordable childcare in out-of-school hours in this country.

Charles Secrett, executive director of Friends of the Earth, echoes the concerns of many senior colleagues when he says new Labour "has even less commitment to the environment than the Tories". Environmentalists fear the Labour team of Michael Meacher, Frank Dobson and pared with John Gummer, the current Environment Secretary, are either ignorant of complex issues or too far outside the Blair inner circle to be taken seriously.

Mr Secrett, in the left-ofcentre magazine Red Pepper, says Labour spin-doctors have failed to grasp the importance to the electorate of conserving wildlife and cleaning up air and water. Labour risks alienating many uncommitted voters who care deeply about the environment."

He says the Conservative Government has, either by default or through Mr Gum mer, provided a forwardthinking, green agenda for Britain that the Labour Party is in danger of squandering Mr Secrett singles out Gordon Brown, the Shadow Chancellor, for being not only behind the Tories on environmenta tax reforms but of drafting policies that are harmful to the planet. 5ft 5in MP stands up for the vertically challenged

By Andrew Pierce, political correspondent

THE shortest male Tory MP in the House of Commons launched a passionate defence of the rights of the vertically challenged yesterday. Michael Stern, 5ft 5in in his

stockinged feet, warned fellow MPs against the dangers of discriminating against undersized adults. He was speaking in a Commons debate about new powers for the police to combat underage drinking in the streets. Mr Stern, 54, speaks from bitter experience. He still bears the scars of humiliation from being re-fused alcohol by publicans-who thought he was still underage as he approached his thirtieth birthday.

For someone like me, who is vertically challenged, I want to ensure that any new powers we give to the police are not abused," he said. "We have to ensure they are not heavyhanded in the way they treat short people. When I was young I was always mistaken as being rather younger than I was because of my lack of inches. That continued into west was on his feet during the second reading of the Confis-cation of Alcohol (Young Persons) Bill. The Bill gives the police the right to confiscate alcohol from underage drinkers in public places.

Mr Stern insisted that safeguards should be written into the legislation, which he supported, and which has all-party backing. "My lack of inches meant that I was regularly challenged in my adult life when I bought alcohol. We must ensure that in our desire to do the right thing, by taking away alcohol from underage drinkers, we do not take away the self-respect of small people at the same time."

Mr Stern is from a small family. His wife, Allian, measures 5ft and their daughter, Katherine, whose nickname is Tich, a little more. All three Sterns have long believed the dictum that small is beautiful. One of their favourite politicians is Lyndon John-son who once said: "Anything above 5ft Sin is a waste of effort."

The MP, who is on the Thatcherite wing of the party

Stern: was refused a drink in his late 20s and is a former vice-chairman, has yet to scale the heights of ministerial office in his 13 years in the Commons. He admitted he had even suffered discrimination at the hands of the Tory party. In the 1970s, when he was seeking selection as a candidate, it was made clear by the Tory grandees in charge of the selection process that he would not make the grade. "There was a long period when the Conservative Party would not select small women," he said.

Even the sly deployment of platform shoes, which were the fashion rage at the time. failed to impress the selection panels. "I was told that I was literally not up to the job because I was not the regulation oft 4in which Tory MPs were expected to be."

Mr Stern, whose colleagues joke he was denied ministerial office because he could not see over the top of the Commons dispatch box, even has difficul-ties on cycling holidays abroad with his wife. "I have to ask for a ladies' mountain bike because otherwise my feet don't touch the ground," he said.

He believes he is in good company. He pointed out that generals such as Napoleon, Julius Caesar and Alexander the Great were small in height but big in spirit. "I, too, can stand up for myself," he said. "I decided to speak up for for those who cannot."

Katherine Stern derived some amusement from her father's intervention. "Did he really say he's 5ft 5in?" she said. "He's not you know. He's

Ford takes curves in new Escort

By KEVIN EASON, MOTORING EDITOR

THE first Ford Escort to be built outside Britain will be a curvy, futuristic hatchback, according to pictures taken in the company's design studio. Workers at the Halewood plant on Merseyside will not make the car because Ford decided that the factory was not efficient enough. Unions are balloting the company's 30,000 workers in Britain on whether to call a strike.

Pictures of the new Escort, planned tested in Germany, are published today in the motoring magazine Auto Express. Even though the car will be built abroad. British designers have been responsible for much of its development. The interiors are expected to come from Ford's Dunton design complex in Essex while engines and transmissions could also be produced in Britain. Designers have abandoned the car's "square" styling for a dramatically rounded shape and tear-

drop rear side windows. Insiders describe it as the biggest design advance in Ford's small-car range since the 1980 launch of the MkIII Escort which became Britain's best-selling car for almost a decade.

Halewood will lose 1.300 jobs, a third of the workforce, when Escort produc-tion ends there. However, Ford emphasises that Halewood could get new investment building a peoplecarrier version of the new Escort, a seven-seater hatchback.

Peer ticked off for punching his former wife

BY SHIRLEY ENGLISH

A SCOTTISH peer convicted of assaulting his former wife walked free from court and escaped a possible fine yesterday because of his "hitherto unblemished character". Lord Rowallan, 49, who has been married three times, has fought a bitter custody battle, sold off the family estate and last year was sued for nonpayment of a catering bill for his wedding buffet, was "admonished" by Sheriff Peter

Gillam at Ayr Sheriff Court. The peer, who was charged as John Corbett, was found guilty of punching Sandrew Corbett, 35, his second wife, so that she fell unconscious. The jumping event at Muirmill Equestrian Club in November

Rowallan, who lives in a farmhouse near Fenwick, East Ayrshire, was alleged to have thrown a heavy punch to the back of Mrs Corbett's neck on his way to help Sophie Dinning, his teenage step-daughter, who had fallen and was trapped under her horse. Yesterday, the sheriff said: 'I have regard to your hitherto unblemished character and the circumstances in which. the assault took place in which you were understandably distraught. Under the circumstances you are admonished."

Both parties refused to speak as they left court yesterday. The maximum sentence for assault convictions for first offenders is three months in prison or a £5,000 fine.

Mrs Corbett, who is 5ft 3in. was felled by the blow from the 6ft 2in fourth baron who in the 1970s twice unsuccess-

She told the court on the first day of the trial, which took place last November before being adjourned until yesterday, that her former husband was "a bully" who hit her because "there wasn't a man or anyone bigger around". At the time of the assault, the couple had not spoken for a year because of a custody dispute over their children. which Rowallan lost. Mrs Corbett was a stable girl on Rowallan's estate before becoming his wife.

Their marriage ended four for the former international showjumper John Brown, with whom she now lives in Symington, South Ayrshire. She said that she had been standing with friends when she saw her furmer husband approaching. "The next thing I knew, I was being picked up by a friend. I had received a blow to the base of my skull." She suffered whiplash injuries and was later treated in hospital at Kilmarnock.

Rowallan, who has no previous convictions, denied assault and punching her to cause injury. He claimed that Mrs Corbett had laughed contemptuously as he rushed to help Sophie, 15.

"I treated it with the contempt it deserved. At no time did I clench my fist and wallop anybody. It was more of a hand flick," he said.

Describing how there was "no love lost" between Mrs Corbett and himself, he claimed the assault allegation was a plot to get revenge on him. His stepdaughter needed eight operations after the accident, according to her mother. Rowallan's third wife, Claire.

Rowallan inherited the title after his father's death in June 1993. He sold the family estate and Rowallan Castle, near Kilmaurs, in 1989 to a proper-ty developer in what he described as "a sad but inevitable" move.

Last year Rowallan settled out of court after being sued for £3,712 plus interest by the owners of the Fenwick Hotel who claimed that he had failed to pay the balance of a food and drink bill for his third wedding reception at his home bright dawn, then Mr Clark swears in

A PERFECT January morning, and a political triumph, shone on the Conservative's new prospective parliamentary candidate for Kensington and Chelsea yesterday as he strode out on a brisk two-hour walk around his vast. rolling estate at Saltwood Castle,

Sun warmed the ancient stone of his Norman keep. Snowdrops thrust through the earth and cattle lowed in the distance. It was good to be alive and to be Alan Clark. At one o'clock the idyll was shattered; Mr Clark encountered the press.

He hoved into view bearing a large knobbly stick and wearing a filthy old leather jerkin, blue-spotted neckerchief, baggy trousers and a pair of green Wellingtons caked in Kentish mud, the very sort of gear his prospec tive urban constituents like to slip into at weekends. A large knot of reporters and cameramen lay in wait at his gatehouse, momentarily unsure whether the approaching rustic figure was their quarry.

They had waited for two hours. Attempts to interview his wife Jane by telephone were met with a full answering machine, and a recorded request to send a fax. Further attempts to interview her over the castle entryphone had elicited the polite but firm response that she was making no comment at all, was quite hysterical at the phone going all the time and was going out to prune the roses.

Two rottweilers growling behind the wooden gate deterred any further journalistic pursuit, but Mrs Clark promised that her husband would arrive soon and would happily talk. In the event the arrangements collapsed. The moment Mr Clark came within range, the photographers began firing. The Worzel Gummidge look had a better chance of hitting the front pages than did a Tory toff in a

"Don't do that," Mr Clark shouted. "I'll stick my tongue out at you." They continued firing. "I'll go upstairs and put my uniform on, then you can take some proper pictures." The shutters kept clicking and Mr Clark's patience snapped.

A BBC television crew had been admitted to the grounds and set up a satellite dish in a muddy farm lane near by, Mr Clark was not going to pass up the chance of a live appearance on the one o'clock news. Through the portcullislike gate he was seen to reappear, having changed swiftly into tweed jacket, clean casual trousers and suede shoes to face the camera on his lawn.

Suddenly, the assembled peasantry outside the gate enjoyed a stroke of luck. A florist drew up with a bouquet, announced herself on nounced sharply, striding Clark had no choice but to come out and collect it through the fractionally opened gate. Lenses were poked through the portcullis holes, questions were shouted. Mrs Clark may have had the distinct impression that she was in a 200, except that the animals were on the even posed a little, turning this way and that for the lenses. The Times gallantly passed through two bottles of milk which she had not dared to collect from the doorstep.

In his limited comments yesterday. Mr Clark claimed that everyone at the selection meeting had supported him and that he had been ahead at every stage of the contest. "My past is an open book; everyone knows about it. The association knew about it and they still wanted me."

Asked how it felt to be fighting one of the safest seats in the country, he countered that it was the safest seat. Mr Clark, as the hounds on the outside discovered vesterday, also lives in one of the safest houses in the country.

Legal wrangle as writer plans to quit home where 19th-century designer spent last years

Sale puts public access to Morris house at risk

ARTS CORRESPONDENT

Judge lo trial on

THE writer and director Christopher Hampton has found himself involved in a lengthy wrangle with a society devoted to William Morris, the 19th-century designer and decorator, over the lease of the house in which Morris lived.

After eight years, Mr Hampton, best known for his adaptation of Les Liaisons Dangereuses, has decided to move out of Kelmscott House, a Georgian house in Hammersmith in which Morris lived for the last 18 years of his life. It is on the market for E895,000 with an option to extend the 36-year les

Members of the William Morris Society are desperate to save it for the nation. An admirer donated the house to the society in 1970. Unable to afford to turn it into a museum, it let the four main floors and used the basement for its offices. An initial application for National Lottery cash has been turned down and the society plans to apply again. Hans Brill, president of the society, which was formed in the 1950s and which has about 2,000 members, explained that, although the house had only a 36-year lease, the 1993 Leasehold Reform Act allowed the purchaser to acquire a 90year extension. That would

"I'm doing my best," he said. "I gave them months to find the money to buy it for the nation and they couldn't." Despite a claim to have lost a prospective buyer, he hopes to exchange contracts

John Kay, chairman of the Kelmscott House Trust, said he considered neither side had been obstructive in the negotiations.

Kelmscott House, where Morris had his study and workshop, was visited by George Bernard Shaw, the artists Dante Gabriel Rossetti and Sir Edward Burne-Jones and the composer Gustav Holst-They were among leading figures drawn to a man whose talents as an artist knew no bounds. He founded the firm of Morris and Co to produce wallpapers, furniglass and the Kelmscott Press to raise standards of book design and printing.

It was in Kelmscott House that Morris was active as a designer and socialist; he had a tapestry loom in one of bedroom. Period details include a chimneypiece de-signed by the architect Philip Webb as a wedding present for Morris.

The society has contacted Tony Blair who urged Mark Fisher, the Shadow Arts Minister, to take up the cause. Mr Fisher expressed concern that the sale would "evict Morris from his own building". Mr Brill said Hammer-

He added: "The trustees are meeting on January 30 and, unless I can bring them some positive indications that we might succeed, the house will be lost to the public."

A Heritage Lottery Fund spokeswoman said the application was turned down because "the heritage merit was not at risk and the difficult and costly work that would be required to convert the building into an art gallery

Surgeon to face court over liver girl's death

By SHIRLEY ENGLISH

A SURGEON accused of refusing a teenage girl a liver transplant on moral grounds, because she had experimented with drugs, is to fly back from the United States to appear in court in Scotland.

The fatal accident inquiry into the death of Michelle Paul, 15, was adjourned yes-terday until April 28 to allow Dr Hilary Sanley to attend with legal representation. She now works in Virginia.

Aberdeen Sheriff Court was told on the second day of the inquiry that Miss Paul had suffered complete liver failure as a result of swallowing half an Ecstasy tablet. Sheriff Graeme Warner said Dr Sanfey was contacted after Miss Paul's mother. Carolann Paul, 37, said in court on Thursday that her daughter was denied a new liver by the surgeon. It would have been her only hope of survival. Miss Paul, from Aberdeen. died in November 1995, six days after she was admitted to the transplant unit at Edinburgh Royal Infirmary. Mrs Paul said Dr Sanfey told her that, if they gave a liver to Michelle, "they would be denying someone else". Doctors had told her they took a team decision to deny her a new liver "on moral grounds". A family history of drug abuse had also raised concerns about post-transplant care.

Academic elite wins bulk of research cash

By DAVID CHARTER, EDUCATION CORRESPONDENT

VICE-CHANCELLORS yesterday defended the existence of an elite of universities after the decision to focus research funding on the most highly rated academics:

Top-rated university departments would receive 20 per cent more government money ry, the Higher Education Funding Council said. Those in Grades 1 or 2, the lowest of seven categories, would receive none.

Grade 2 departments have hitherto received government funds. Now 58 per cent of research departments at former polytechnics will be denied funding, compared with 3.5 per cent at traditional universities.

Sir Derek Roberts, Provostof University College London, which came fifth in the research league table, said that the awards underlined the existence of an elite group of universities. Twenty universit ties have ten or more of the top-rated departments, with the highest concentrations at Cambridge (44), Oxford (40), UCL (29), Bristol (20), and Birmingham. Manchester and Sheffield (all 18).

Sir Derek objected to the term "by League". He said that some universities concentrated on research excellence, others on undergraduate teaching. The perception of an 'lvy League' is that somehow it is all to do with prestige and privilege." One would not refer to the top half of the Mootball Premiership as an Ivy League, "as though they had got a divine right to be there", he said. "It is just a fact of life."

He added: "If you look through the results of the research assessment, you find Cambridge at the top and Luton at the bottom, and to suggest they are equivalent in terms of the quality of education, the standard of degrees and their commitment to research is not just stupid, it is damaging to Luton. The point is recognising diversity."

Sir Derek said that he believed in an honest awareuniversities. The fact of life is that it is wrong to believe we have an homogeneous Sir Colin Campbell, Vice-Chancellor of Nottingham, which has 16 top-rated departments, said: "I think there is a consensus in the university system that there has to be selective investment to back the really strong departments. The key point is to keep the things we have that are worldclass and in a position to compete with the other world-class institutions in North America. Europe and Australasia.

A spokesman for the funding council said: "We will focus money more narrowly at a subject level. The more toprated departments you have got, the more money you are going to get."

Dr Peter North, Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, again gave warning yesterday that uniyersities faced a funding crisis because of grant cuts for equipment and teaching un-dergraduates. He wrote in Oxford's annual report that the whole university system was being damaged by a 34 per cent cut over the past

"No commercial concern could have coped with cuts of this magnitude without reducing the quality of its goods or services," he said. "If this general reduction in funding continues, we shall end up with a second-rate university

MANY sources have supplied and replenished the pure living water of Christian faith in the British Isles over the past 1,500 years. Two particularly important streams began to flow in the period after the departure of the Romans. One had its source in Rome and entered England with St Augustine's mission to Kent, the other came from Ireland and entered Scotland with St Columba's journey to

It is a happy coincidence that, in 1997, we celebrate both these streams, this year being the 1,400th anniversary of St Augustine's arrival in Kent and of Columba's death on Iona. Each has contributed much to the Christian life and character of Britain - the Augustinian stream, with its broad, eirenic tolerance, its lofty language and sensitive pastoral concern; the Columban stream, coursing through Pilgrimage is an appropriate way to celebrate the events of 597. Both Columba and Augustine were Christians on the move, whose faith expressed itself in dvceived the Church in terms of provisional rather than permanent structures. We can learn much from the example of our Celtic and Anglo-Saxon ancestors, who worshipped God in simple wattle and daub huts that could easily be discarded, dismantled or extended as circimstances changed. There are lessons to be learnt from their engagement with contemporary culture, their use of symbol poem and story in prefer ence to concept, argument and sermon, and the spirituality and artistic and scho-lastic achievements of the monasteries which they planted across the countryside. They brought complementary gifts to the infant British Church that are still much needed today: the order, stability and catholicity of Gregorian Rome as well as the more anarchic and free-wheeling spirituality of 6th century Ireland

RELIGION CORRESPONDENT

A NEW body aimed at improving relations between Jews, Muslims and Christians is to be launched this weekend with the aim of widening the contact between preachers, teachers and leaders of all three faiths.

The Three Faiths Forum, the first body of its kind in Britain, is to be based in north London at the Sternberg Centre, Europe's largest Jewish cultural centre. The initiative comes as tensions between the three faiths, which share a common true with regard to the Abrahamic

Islam are all branches of the same family.

The Three Faiths Forum will work alongside organisations such as the Interfaith Network, the Council of Christians and Jews, the Maimonides foundation and the Abrahamic forum, set up last October by the International Council of Christians and Jews to improve contacts between the three faiths.

The forum has the backing of Dr Zaki Badawi, chairman of the Council of Imams and Mosques of Great Britain, and has been welcomed by the Board of Deputies of British Jews. It was set up by Sir Sigmund Sternberg, a buisnessman and phi-lanthropist, chairman of the executive committee of the International Council of Christians and Jews.

Sir Sigmund said: "The forum is open to all those who, while adhering to their respective religious faiths, are committed to the vital task of developing mutual respect. It is hoped, through dialogue conducive to friendship and trust, to widen the contacts between preachers, teachers and writers from all three faiths." The Right Rev Richard Harries,

Internet army vies with crusty colonels to spot first cuckoo

RETIRED colonels, the traditional chroniclers of the first cuckoo of spring, are facing stiff competition this year from thousands of schoolchildren armed with tiny video camreras and computers. The pupils will attempt to record for the first time the exact spot where the bird lands and calls.

It is hoped the children will also chronicle the arrival of frog spawn in ponds, the opening of the first snowdrop, and when and where the first swallows leave to return to South Africa.

Pupils across Britain are to become desktop naturalists, exchanging information over the internet to map the passage of the seasons, under the scheme launched by the environmental charity Ground-work and backed by the National Grid. The organisers are planning to plug the cameras into nests and nest boxes when animals and birds take up residence. It is also hoped to extend the project to Birdwatchers have identified what they believe to be the first sighting of a wild American canvas back duck in Britain. The duck, a male, was spotted in Norfolk in a group of pochards, a common and similar-sized duck that migrates to Britain for winter. It was seen flying between Downham Market and the Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust's reserve at Welney. If confirmed, it will be the first sighting in Britain since records began in the 1950s.

Bishopswood Environmental Education Centre in Worcestershire, who is helping to mastermind the scheme, said yesterday that microcameras had already been installed underneath his centre so that pupils could watch mice and voles moving in and out of their homes to forage. He said it was hoped to install microcameras in the homes of other animals, including badger sets and rabbit burrows. Dormice, nesting at a reserve in Bramley Firth, Hampshire, are also set to become tele-and his accomplice were convicted yesterday of intentionally disturbing protected rare birds in their nests.

The case was the latest to result from police raids on the homes of bird enthusiasts in eight counties in late 1994 when more than 11,000 birds' eggs, as well as documents and photographs, were seized.

Police gathered intelligence from a raid two months earlier on the Red Lion Hotel in Salisbury, Wiltshire, during the annual dinner of the Jourdain Society, a registered charity devoted to the scientific study of birds eggs. Bird conservationists have long suspected the society of being used for exchanging information on the black-market trade in birds' eggs, an allegation which the society strenuously Andrew Dixon, 31, a research lecturer at Sunderland University and author of academic papers on bird breeding biology and Andrew Lawrence, 35, of Brynmawr, Gwent, were each given a conditional discharge for 18 months by Salisbury magistrates. Dixon was ordered to pay £500 towards prosecution costs and Lawrence £350.

Dixon was found guilty of Thirteen other charges against Dixon. and four against Lawrence, involving alleged disturbance of red kites, hobbies, peregrine falcons, Dartford warblers, cirl buntings and goshawks. were dismissed for lack of evidence after a five-day trial. The court accepted that Dixon had a valid licence allowing him to visit the nests of peregrine falcons for research purposes. Paul Rice, for the prosecution, said that a diary kept by Dixon contained clutches, which he could only have discovered by looking directly into the birds' nests. Expert witnesses called by the prosecution said that birds of prey were peculiarly susceptible to human interference. For the defence, Peter Codner submitted that no wrongdoing had been proved. There was no direct evidence that any bird was disturbed except for the three cases of the peregrine falcons "where Dr Dixon was carrying out a lawful duty for which he is licensed, he said.

Museum vandals destroy 50 years of flying history

A VINTAGE aircraft that took two years to restore has been destroyed in an arson attack by vandals. The Vickers Valetta, one of only three of its type in the world, was set alight on its stand outside the North East Aircraft Museum in

Dave Charles, the museum chairman, said yesterday that he wept as he watched firemen damping down the ruined aircraft. "I had to walk away because I started to cry. realise it is just a big piece of metal, but it represents this country's heritage and a lot of work by a dedicated group of volunteers, all of whom are heartbroken about what has

Mr Charles, 34, added: There are only two other Valettas in the world now. It was so rare that it would be impossible to put a price on it. I have been involved with the museum for 16 years and each year I travel up to 7,000 miles on business connected with it. But after this I have to wonder about the long-term future of The Valetta was based on

The wrecked aircraft was bought in 1969 by the Sunderland Flying Club, which kept it for ten years before handing it over to the museum. It was the largest aircraft in the collection until the museum obtained a Vulcan bomber in Enthusiasts who had re stored the plane in time for last year's Sunderland Airshow, were devastated at its destruction. Craig Blundred, the museum publicity officer said: "We are disgusted that something like this could happen. The aircraft can never be replaced. Our members and enthusiasts around the country will be sickened that heritage like this has been destroyed. Private hospitals win VAT appeal

By MICHAEL HORSNELL

A VAT windfall worth more than £100 million could be paid to private hospitals after a Court of Appeal ruling. A five-year legal battle brought by a group of private health companies, which claimed they should not pay VAT on drugs and some surgical appliances, has ended in a victory against Customs and Excise.

The repayment of the money has been frozen, how-ever. after Customs announced yesterday that it will seek leave to appeal to the House of Lords. Failing that, it will consider asking Parliament for changes in legislation that would oblige private hospitals to pay VAT.

Barry Hassell, chief executive of the Independent Health Care Association, said: "The importance of the victory for the independent sector is that this moves us towards a level playing field with the NHS. The NHS is able to recover all of its VAT whereas we have not been able. We, as individwe do not. If we do need them. the fact that it is a private hospital or NHS should have no bearing on VAT." The legal fight against a Customs ruling that private hospitals could not reclaim VAT on purchases of medical supplies was led by the Wellington Hospital in London.

A Customs spokesman said: The appeal court ruling has provided a tax break for private hospitals that the taxpayer will basically have to foot. It to appeal. The money will be frozen until all avenues of appeal have been exhausted."

Vicar is acquitted of stealing cheques

A VICAR was acquitted yesterday of embezzling more than £7,000 from parish funds. The Rev Stephen Ashton, 41, denied three charges of theft, dating from 1989 and 1990, when he was vicar of St Wilfrid and St Anne, in Newton Heath, Greater Manches-The prosecution at leged that he applied for money from the Ecclesiastical insurance Fund to cover claims for vandalism and theft. It was said that cheques were siphoned off into a secret church account and into his bank account. A retrial was ordered after a trial in May last year.

In January 1994, Mr Ashton, who became vicar of Braege with Germoe, in Cornwall, appeared before magistrates in Launceston, charged with stealing church artefacts. They were told that Mr Ashton, who had been treated for depression, had stolen four prints from Morwenstow Church, Cornwall, and a plaster figure from St Mary's, in Par. He was sentenced to 100 hours' community service.

At that time, his solicitor said that Mr Ashton had been under strain. As a campaigner against the ordination of women priests he had received threats. He resigned from the church over the issue and received a £24,000 payoff.

Mr Ashton said outside court yesterday: "I am ex-tremely relieved. I have always maintained my innocence."

Shop stewards angry at rejection of peace plan to end Liverpool dispute

Dockers threaten to intensify strike

DOCKERS in Liverpool yesterday threatened to continue Britain's longest current strike with renewed ferocity" after their peace plan was rejected by port managers.

The dispute has gone on for 16 months, four months longer than the miners' strike. It has been soured by allegations of arson, intimidation, assault and thuggery. The homes of directors of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company have been attacked, strike-breakers have been threatened and a community divided.

Yesterday Jimmy Nolan. leader of the shop stewards. said the dispute could end by the dockers forming themselves into an employment agency to provide staff to port employers. He claimed the dockers could raise £500,000 towards the cost of an agency in which the company would have a controlling stake to enable the men to continue as members of the pension fund.

But he insisted that, in return, workers from the Drake Ports agency, who took over their 329 jobs, should be dismissed. Mr Nolan said: We recommend that they Eric Leatherbarrow, one of the company directors. He said: Since the Drake men started, creased by 50 per cent and our customers have renewed confidence in us. We have indicated we would support the of customers." He said the establishment of a co-opera-new development should not tive on a fully commercial basis, but the suggestion that it should replace the Drake workforce, who have so dramatically transformed the prospects of the port, is totally unacceptable.

To accede to such a demand would seriously undermine the port's excellence, performance and confidence

new development should not distract attention from the strike leaders' refusal to hold a secret hallot on the cumnany's own offer. This involves reemploying the men for 12 weeks and then paying off all but 40 of them, who could apply for jobs, with a £28,000a-head redundancy package

Latest football score: the blind are leading the blind

By DANIEL McGrory

SUPPORTERS gathering on the terraces for a Cup match today will be asked to curb their natural inclination to barrack and bawl. Rattles and klaxons are banned.

The players are blind and need to be able to hear the clatter of 100 ball bearings packed inside their football andto hear instructions from their goalkeeper, who is partially sighted.

However, the players do tradition of having their fans berate the referee with insults about how the match officials need their eyes testing for some of the Wails of pain from the pitch are often louder than in most other games. Mr Griffiths, who helped to organise the tournament, admitted: "Our tackling is a lot rougher and looks more brutal because you where the other player is."

They do not change ends at half time, so as not to disorientate themselves. Players use their arms to the outside of the pitch. They allow the ball to go over waist height as they like to head it, even though it is heavier than a normal FA match ball.

For international games, the players have a coach behind the goal giving directional instructions, but on today they will rely on their goalkeeper and "on listening for the thud of the other fellow's boots coming towards you. We are like bats relying on echoes." For penalties, the referee will place the ball and then line

OUTSTANDING INDIVIDUALS OUTSTANDING OPPORTUNITIES

Michael Page has built its reputation over the last 20 years by matching outstanding individuals with outstanding opportunities. On Tuesday 28th January 1997 Michael Page City will be hosting a seminar for newly or recently qualified ACAs interested in making a move into the City.

Representatives from several leading investment banks will give presentations on a variety of roles within financial institutions.

Following these presentations, there will be a reception giving candidates an excellent opportunity to informally discuss a career in banking, with representatives of the organisations present.

Places are strictly limited and by invitation only. To avoid disappointment, please contact:

MARTIN-WARD · ANDERSON ·

The Burton Group and Martin Ward Anderson would like to offer their congratulations on the successful conclusion of your accountancy training. Understandably your initial thoughts will be to celebrate, but later you may wish to review your future career plans.

The Burton Group is one of the UK's leading fashion retail groups with sales in excess of £2 billion and profits before tax up 53%. With continued growth in innovative retailing and the establishment of key brands, the Group has developed into a balanced collection of retail businesses including Debenhams. Burton Menswear, Dorothy Perkins, Top Man/Top Shop, Principles and Evans. Events in 1996 include the establishment of the International Division, and the acquisitions of Racing Green and Innovations which have laid the foundations for the home shopping market.

The Opportunities

The divisional head office finance teams in London provide the essential financial analysis and commercial support to the business. The Group is committed to providing challenging commercial experience to enable individuals to progress within the finance function across the organisation.

The Group offers the opportunity to develop financial and analytical skills within the fast moving retail sector. You will gain exposure to strategic planning, performance review, investment appraisal and cost/value analysis - working directly with the line functions.

Suitable candidates will be qualified accountants or passed finalists with proven academic ability. Your personal qualities will be even more critical than your technical skills and you will be able to demonstrate credibility with non financial people, commercial awareness and a flexible approach. You will also have well developed analytical and PC skills, with the determination and drive to succeed within a highly pressurised team environment. The Benefits In return for your commitment we offer a very competitive remuneration package, including a car or car allowance, bonus up to 20%, generous staff discount and contributory pension.

The Burton Group is an equal opportunities employer. For further information, please telephone Mark Freehairn at Martin Ward Anderson on: 0171 240 2233. Alternatively, send or fax your curriculum vitae to him at Martin Ward Anderson, 20 Shorts Gardens, Covent Garden, London WC2H 9AU, fax No. 0171 240 8818, or e-mail him on info@mwa.co.uk, Please

We congratulate our students...

Newly qualified and ready for the next challenge

Price Waterhouse is one of the leading international providers of audit & business advisory, tax and management consultancy services. Our integrated global network of firms and offices helps to-tier clients solve their complex business problems.

As a result of increasing business activity, we have a number of opportunities for outstanding ACAs to join our Audit & Business Advisory and our Tax practices throughout the UK. Our expectations and standards are high, but we believe the experience and opportunities we offer to be truly outstanding.

It you wish to join the Audit & Business Advisory practice, you should have had first class exposure to the audit of sizeable, preferably public comparties. Prior experience of international client work would also be an advantage. If your interest is in our tax practice you may have trained in audit or tax, but most important will be your drive and determination to succeed in this demanding professional environment

In return for your commitment, we offer first class professional experience, ongoing technical and skills-based training and a stimulating working environment. We also operate a flexible benefits policy which will allow you to influence the structure of your remuneration package to suit your personal circumstances. The career opportunities open to you include the development of specialist skills and international secondments. Your advancement will be based on merit and may lead to partnership:

You should write, enclosing a comprehensive CV, specifying whether you are interested in audit or tax, and your preferred location to: Nigel Barker, Tax Recruitment Manager, Price Waterhouse, Southwark Towers, 32 London Bridge Street, London SET 95Y.

Law Report January 25 1997 Queen's Bench

Before Mr Justice Chadwick |Judgment December 9|

A taxing officer had no power to review a taxation after the issue of a certificate for the costs allowed on a provisional taxation under Order 62, rule 31(4) to (7) of the Rules of the Supreme Court where no party had informed the court of its wish to be heard.

Mr Justice Chadwick, sitting as an additional judge of the Queen's Bench Division in Birmingham, so heid in a reserved judgment allowing an application by the plaintiff, Bromsgrove Medical Products Ltd., and setting aside the leave given by District Judge Anderson on August 16, 1996 to the defendant, Edgar Vaughan and Co Ltd., to have a taxation of the plaintiff's costs under Order 62, rule 2140 to held in a reserved judgment allow costs under Order 62, rule 31(4) to

MR JUSTICE CHADWICK said that the application raised a point of some difficulty in relation to the practice on a provisional taxation under Order 62, rule 31. The issue was whether a taxing officer had power, under rule 33, to review a taxation after a certificate sessment in order to pass the Final overall:

Rule 22(1)(a) required that a taxing officer should, at the conclusion of taxation proceedings before him, issue a certificate for the costs allowed by him.

The rules contained no expres provision defining the point at which the proceedings were to be taken as concluded; but the pos-ition could be ascertained by ition could be ascertained by reference to the provisions for review contained in Part VI of Order 67

Where there was no appoint ment for a taxation, then the proceedings before the taxing of-licer could not be regarded as concluded until the expiry of 14 days after the parry whose bill it was had received notice of the amount which the taxing officer proposed to allow in respect of the bill following the provisional taxation.

Where neither the paying party nor the receiving party had in-formed the proper officer that he wished to be heard on the taxation. the proceedings before the taxing officer had to be taken to have concluded 14 days after that notice was given to him. In those circumstances there was nothing left for the taxing officer to do except issue on his provisional taxation. It was a necessary implication from the scheme of the review procedure in Part VI of Order 62 that the existence of a taxing officer's certificate was a bar to review by the taxing officer.

The power of a taxing officer to set aside a certificate was limited by rule 22/1/le) to those cases in which that power was exercised in order to enable him to extend the period provided by rule 33 to apply for a review. There was no general power for a taxing officer to se aside a certificate, once issued,

It could not be a proper exercise of the power conferred by rule 22(1)(e) to set aside a certificate in circumstances where even in the bsence of a certificate, no application for review could be made under rule 33. Rule 33(1) expressly excluded from the review procedure a decision on a provisional

His Landshin was satisfied that a decision as to the amount which the taxing officer proposed to allow, for the purposes of rule 31(o) was a decision on a provisional taxation. There was no power to review it under rule 33: and so no power under rule 22(1)(c) to set aside a certificate in order to enable an application for review to be made under that rule.

Adjudicator need not consider points not made by applicant

Ex Parte Sureshkumar

On hearing asylum applications it was not incumbent on an im-migration special adjudicator to consider relevant points not taken on an applicant's behalf if the outcome would have been the same whether or not the points had been expressly taken.

The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Nourse, Lord Justice Saville and Lord Justice Brooke) so stated on December 19 when refusing Kumarasamy Suresh-kumar, a citizen of Sri Lanka, his renewed application for leave to apply for judicial review of the isal by the Immigration Appeal Tribunal of leave to appeal against the refusal by a special adjudicator of leave to enter the UK.

LORD JUSTICE BROOKE said that the applicant sought leave contending that it had been incumbent on the special adjudicator to consider the applicant's position in accordance with the law relating to alternative": an issue on which the adjudicator had received neither evidence nor submissions.

Whether the adjudicatory authorities, in particular the limmigration Appeal Tribunal, were under a duty to take relevant points of their own motion was an important question. However, if a supervisory court was of the opinion that the result would be identical whether or not a point was expressly taken, then it should

A career in Finance...more than just a numbers game

Working as a finance professional in one of Europe's leading investment banks involves more than getting the numbers right. Our Finance team contributes proactively to business development, providing expert advice and ensuring that there is an appropriate control environment. A Group which is as complex and dynamic as ours demands high quality individuals who have the personality and technical skills to work closely with the business.

We need people who thrive in a fast moving environment, enjoy contributing as part of a team, resolve issues creatively and can communicate ideas effectively at any level. We have roles for Finance professionals that require different levels of experience in Financial Control, Business Support and Project teams.

If you are newly qualified or have up to three years' post qualification experience, have a strong academic background and are able to demonstrate a track record of success in your career to date, you could be who we are looking for. Financial services experience is not a prerequisite, but a desire to build a career within this world class organisation is.

If you want to be a part of our team, call Rosalind Coffey or Kathryn Davis (ACA) at Michael Page City on 0171 269 2471 (answer phone after hours) or send your CV to them at Michael Page City, Page House, 39-41 Parker Street, London WC2B 5LH.

REMEMBERING Ogdon, the finest British pianist this century, for what would have been his 60th birthday next week, afforded an occasion of gala dimensions on Tuesday. No fewer than seven outstanding pianists assembled in tribute to their peer, and to benefit two organisations concerned to support young artists, the John Ogdon Foundation and the Park Lane Group. As is the way with such events, too much was crammed into the programme, prolonging it to well over three hours, but retaining its audience with a wealth of pianistic artistry. Ogdon himself was visibly recalled, and heard at the keyboard, in excerpts from a televised South Bank Show made shortly before his death in 1989, and his widow, the pianist Brenda Lucas, was among the a respectable English academic working in America. When we meet her, she is paying a duty visit to the grotty section of London where his family lives. But it is a pretty bizarre homecoming. Her husband, Teddy, returns to his campus alone, having grudgingly handed her over to his father and brothers, whose plan is to put her on the game.

As a cub critic in 1965, I reviewed the play's world pre-miere in Cardiff, and well recall the dismayed twittering in the hotel lounge where struggled to pen an overnight notice. And nobody could blame those expostulating Welsh men and women. It was a shocking play, not least because the demure but steely Ruth had herself organised her impending posting to Soho. Indeed, a test of any revival of The Homecoming is this: has the play retained its troubling pull? Here the answer is yes and no. Roger Michell's production is gratuitously slow. He sometimes allows Pinter's famous pauses to become silences, and his silences to escalate into long, wordless dirges. Yet the play's strange, sinister atmosphere is not lost. thanks to some strong, tense acting and, not least, William Dudley's set. You see through gauze-like walls beyond the barnlike living room specified in the text to shadowy places on both the first and second floors. The impression is of sessing people brood and lurk. That is fitting, for the play may be seen as a cool, watchful study in human 200logy. The men here affect finer feelings only occasionally and then for show. Mainly they are motivated by animal drives: for power, dominance and,

The changing face of the capital is revealed in a controversial new Museum of London show

The big news of the week? Step aside Fortillo Wait your turn; Climon Don't rain on my parade ground. General Sir Peter de la Billière. Spain and America are going to war over a pornographic film allegedly starring Marilyn Monroe.

Yes, I thought that gross exaggeration would add a little spice to your comflakes. These are the facts. Or perhaps they aren't facts, but that's all part of the story. Some while back, a Spanish film festival announced that it was going to unveil a short but actionpacked movie showing Monroe having sex with what the showbiz paper Variety describes intrigunighy as a "scrawny man".

Every historic discovery comes with a plausible yarn attached, and this is no exception. The loann film was allegedly made in 1947, sold for a few dollars at a Paris flea market in 1977, and does indeed feature a game young lass who looks something like the premakeover Norma Jean Baker. The revelation, if that is what it authenticated by the American Film Institute. The institute says is well on its way to becoming the Turin Shroud of our time. the authentication is itself not All this strikes me as odd. When authentic. The Monroe estate has the "was Jane Austen gay?" row was raging in the raunchy col-ums of the London Review of Books last year, one could under-stand why the exchanges ignited declared itself saddened and sceptical. American film critics claim that, even if the face is Monroe's, the body isn't. (How do they tell these things?) Hugh Hefner has violent passions. The question cast his expert eye over the does fundamentally affect the way disputed tiesh and announced that one reads the novels. it is "an obvious hoax".

But the revelation that Monroe had casual sex with scrawny men and indeed with stocky men. paunchy men, dumpy men and lots of men called Kennedy - is hardly news. What's annoyed Hollywood about this little movie, I think, is the fact that it punctures her on-screen mystique. The point about Monroe's cinematic allure, Madrid is zinging with indignasurely, was the tension between simmering sexual promise and wide-eyed innocence. Shatter that equilibrium with some grainy skin-flick that reveals everything, and you rob Hollywood's greatest sex symbol of her erotic power.

What I want to know, though, is what happened to the scrawny man. If he is still alive, he could confirm whether his parmer was the real Marilyn. Or could he? Were they ever properly intro-duced before they played their epic scene? I fear we may never know.

ystique is an important part of every branch of entertainment, is it not? How else can one explain the strange magnetism that impels otherwise same folk to part with huge sums of money in order to be in the same stadium as an adored icon - even though logic tells them that the experience will be deeply unsatisfactory?

This gloomy question is prompted by a letter from an English reader, Derek Walker, who attended the New Year's Eve concert given a few weeks ago by our old tenorial friends. Messrs Pavarotti. Domingo and Carreras, in Vancouver. Like many others in the stadium that night to judge from the scathing reports in the Canadian press) he is furious. "I paid C$540 for our two tickets, which is expensive by any standard," Mr Walker writes. "But we found ourselves at one end of a large football stadium with the stage at the opposite end."

Well, so far so commonplace. Paying £200 to be at the other end of a stadium from Pavarotti is one of the defining experiences of modern culture. Another is finding out later that, because supply greatly exceeded demand, you are sitting next to someone who picked up a ticket for a mere £30 or so, as many in Vancouver discovered. But let Mr Walker continue with his sorry tale:

"We could only see the singers courtesy of two video screens, but as we were so far away the sound and vision was out of sync. The ultimate disgrace was that although the publicity indicated that the three tenors would sine up to and through the midnight hour. they left the stage at 11.50, and at 11.55 the whole orchestra left. We were left with an unknown chat show host and the choir - the former remarking that he did not recall being abandoned before."

Mr Walker has written to the concert promoter demanding a refund. Good luck to him. CBS News has reported that while the Three Tenors banked CSI million each after the concert and the promoter rather more than that, local sponsors lost C$9.4 million. That's showbusiness. I guess. After reading Mr Walker's letter I said to my wife: "If you ever see me extract £400 from my wallet to pay for tickets to hear a large tenor sing in a football stadium, you have my permission to shoot me."

"Don't worry," she replied. "I've never seen you open your waller."

Later the money to build these extravaganzas came from studios such as Warner, Paramount and Fox, which owned chains of theatres until, perhaps disastrously, they were forced to sell under antitrust laws in the 1950s. This was also the era when out-oftown drive ins spelt doom for main-street movie theatres, but even here the inexhaustible Margolies finds illuminated hoardings as flamboyant and vulgar as the Chevvies parked there every night.

Globalisation: is it the death of Leviathan?

Harold James says trade will force

Europe to abandon big government

ony Blair recently opened up what will be the key political size of the State. He pointed out that when Clement Attlee left office in 1951, state spending amounted to about 30 per cent of national income (whereas the current level is more than 40 per cent). And he came to the conclusion that there inevitably wold be a critical examination of the size of the public sector in the next few years.

The traditional understanding of what states do is now challenged by globalisation: the increasingly rapid integration of the global economy. The process of managing reform of the State is far from being a simple political task.

An unprecedented expansion of the State accompanied the first Industrial Revolution in the 18th and 19th centuries. New wealth gave greater resources to governments, and new problems called for collective solutions. By the late 19th century, a German economist, Adolph Wagner, even formulated a law" of the constant growth of state expenditure, and of the increasing share of the State in national income. The organisation of the new states, bureaucratic and hierarchical, was also mirrored in business organisation, with numerous layers of authority and control. At the moment, Wagner's law is going into reverse.

Collective management from the top down — the characteristic behaviour of the If the EU modern state - will stand in the way of effective institutional adaptation to global change. In addition, transfer payments - increasingly the business of the late 20th-century state - are the opposite of wealth creation.

One answer sometimes given is that the global market will simply force states to adapt. Indeed, in some countries Wagner's law of increasing state expenditure, characteristic of the first Industrial Revolution, has already gone into reverse. By attacking universal entitlement programmes, some countries (notably New Zealand. Chile, but also Ireland) have radically reduced the share of public expenditure of national income. Similar reforms, in particular the elimination of many subsidies to the prosperous middle classes, are urgently needed in other European states, including Britain. But in practice, states have a tendency to postpone necessary reform, until a sudden collapse of confidence forces an adjustment that would have been much more painless if it had been undertaken in a timely way. Britain had a peculiarly agonising case of this in 1976.

Many of the institutional adaptations required in responding to globalisation can best be tackled in an international framework, rather than at a national level. Some aspects of this new economic order are relatively well understood, even though the case-by-case application of such principles is full of arguments and difficulties. This is the case in working out a framework for the effective liberalisation of trade in goods and services, and of capital flows. Liberalising labour laws to allow and encourage more flexible forms of employment is also a task that may be easier to accomplish politically through international agreement, because otherwise there will be constant national suspicions and recriminations that other countries are engaging in "undercutting" or "social protectionism".

It may even be the case that arrangements to stabilise government budgets can more easily be worked out on a cross-national basis. Some countries have managed heroic feats of fiscal retrenchment only to let expenditures and delicits rise again. Britain is a striking example. After surpluses at the beginning of the 1990s, the budget deficit as a share of gross domestic product rose to 6.4 per cent in 1993 and 5.3 per cent in 1995. This is why the current debate about the consequences of Maastricht is so unfortunate and untimely. The Maastricht cri..ria for monetary union are being interpreted in debate as a recipe for deflation and sustained high levels of unemployment. Two quite separate issues have become hopelessly caught up with each other. Fiscal stabilisation is essential in order to prevent a vicious cycle in which the servicing of public debt requires ever larger shares of current expenditure and also of national income. Only the reduction of public claims on savings will free larger sums for private sector investment.

But fiscal stabilisation is much harder in the absence of sustained growth. The attempt to cut expenditures or increase taxes necessarily provokes protest; and if the attempt is successful, growth may be further reduced.

A fiscal stabilisation agreement only makes sense in a context of an expanding resource base. This can be accomplished only by accompanying the fiscal measures by a package designed to achieve long-

to Europe's unemployment maiaise, will hardly do this trick. This is why some sort of concerted reduction of barriers to employment is needed, including a lowering of taxes and national insurance

It would be helpful to conduct this liberalisation on an international level - for instance, through the European Union - rather than leaving the debate to national governments and parliaments, which are more easily influenced and obstructed by pressure groups. This does not require an abolition of the welfare state"; but it does mean a very substantial refinement and reshaping, and in particular a reduction of the huge transfer payments now being made.

∃he European Union began as an institution for a Europe committed to a greater share of government in national resources, in which states would play a major role as redistributors of income. If the EU is to survive, and not to be torn apart by increasingly vociferous claims for redistribution, presented with increasingly nationalistic language, it needs to reverse its hitorical direction. The way that the EU will survive in the next 40 years is as a guide and a manager of liberalisation. Britain should not just seek a new role in Europe: it should also find a new role for Europe. The challenge of globalisation requires a response that goes beyond the present muddle in both Britain and Trance has a profound case of the blues, and the wave of gloom sweeping the country has found expression in a slew of industrial protests touching some of the most unlikely corners of the land. Last week alone saw strikes and demonstrations by transport workers, bank clerks, seamstresses and archaeologists. On Thursday the rail unions are planning another one-day stoppage. Part-time actors have taken to storming theatres around the country and last Monday the nation's astrologers, in a rare moment of unanimity, announced the setting up of a vorkers' federation.

On the surface the strikes and demonstrations appear to have little in common: the drivers are demanding retirement at 55; the archaeologists marched to protect an important Roman excavation site from housing developers; the employees of Credit Foncier bank feared job losses under a government plan to break up the indebted property-lender; and the actors want to preserve the social security benefits they enjoy while "resting".

How the bourgeoisie is paralysing France

facing an uncertain future which. given their professed expertise, seemed rather strange. But lurking behind the unrest is a generalised fear that long-established acquis sociaux, the perks and guarantees established under the postwar welfare state, are about to be eradicated in the cost-cutting march to monetary union.

Despite having one of the lowest ratios of union membership in Europe, France is well versed in the techniques of melodramatic protest. Taking to the streets is a tradition stretching back beyond the Revolution, reflecting a culture that often lacks strong institutions of communication between goverestablished and, in the eyes of some, bizarrely tolerated. When French lorry drivers illegally clogged up every road last November the majority of citizens applauded, the police stood by and the Government caved in. Still smarting from the crippling transport strikes of last winter, the Prime Minister, Alain Juppé, is plainly desperate to avoid another full-

Encouraged by a rattled Government and a sympathetic public, the larger unions are mobilising for another demonstration of muscle. but it is the patchwork of smaller, unpredictable and often highly eccentric protests that most closely scale industrial conflagration.

Eight days ago, hundreds of employees of the Crédit Foncier stormed into the bank's Paris headquarters and took the governor and seven officials hostage Jérôme Meyssonnier found himself living off canteen food while, down in the atrium, his employees have been conducting what can only be described as a huge and rowdy slumber party, with singing. dancing and plenty of liquid refreshment. The demonstrators take it in turns to serve the customers. M Meyssonmer did not seem to mind the indignity and only requested that the press did not photograph him asleep on the mattress provided by social services. After six days he was released, praising his employees in the southern city of Rodez, archaeologists downed their magnifying glasses and toothbrushes and staged a general strike, accusing M Juppé of giving permission for a construction project on top of important Gallo-Roman ruins.

A cricke by archaeologists might

A strike by archaeologists might seem about as threatening as a work stoppage by vicars, but faced by ranks of serious protesters with beards and doctorates, the Government backpedalled fast, ordered the bulldozers to leave and agreed to give the archaeologists £70,000 to carry out excavation work.

France is quietly bubbling with a frustration that has no single explanation and many contributing causes, including rising unemployment, high taxes, political corrup-tion and economic uncertainty in the drive to a single currency. Whether the Government can keep the promises made at Maastricht at the same time as buying its way out of industrial unrest, however, may be a question that only the Federa-

Charmer Clark's last stand

As Kensington and Chelsea rejoices, the great Tory cavalier might reflect on his political comeback thus . . .

altwood, November: Fool, Clark, fool. This is humiliating. Newbury, Arundel, Tunbridge Wells, Devon. Nothing but misery. I feel like a 25-Young Conservative, traipsing the country, feigning fascination with some grotty backwater where I wouldn't be seen dead. I simply do not care if five batty hags do or do not "want me" as their "member". Tory candidate selection is pure sadism. The Yanks are right. Have a primary and appeal over the heads of the cabalistas direct to the proles. Last night I was treated as the alien rapist from outer Kent. I was shortlisted only so the harridans could ogle me. Then they choose some whey-faced apparatchik from Major's private office, forced on them by the whips with promises of lavish honours. In future I must stick to the white Commonwealth: Surrey, Sussex. perhaps Kensington if poor Nick has to walk the plank. Politics is awful.

It requires one to yearn for the misfortune of others.

Albany, Wednesday December II:

Why oh why do I do radio? Jim Naughtie came out with it direct, *Come on, Mr Clark, would you not really like to be MP for Kensington?" I hesitated, then said, "Yes, I would." I immediately regretted it. Honesty is always the worst policy. It was too de bas en haut. As Curzon said, you should never take a post that does you a greater honour than you do it. A constituency should be begging me to stand, yet I sounded as if I was seeking a job as Chelsea Arts Club doorman. The BBC deputed (I'm sure deliberately) a revolting hermaphrodite bursting out of her tights to show me out of the studio. while Naughtie gloated. The whole incident lacked style. 1 slumped into the DBS feeling miserable. Only the sight of hopfields south of Maidstone cheered me up.

Albany. Sunday January 19: Shortlisted to last six at Kensington, which makes a change from the Neanderthals at Tunbridge and Hove. Every time I am rejected I feel low and every time I get shortlisted I feel even lower. It just means a more painful rejection. I also seriously doubt my ability to defend this Government. Dropped by at Brooks's on Friday where everyone thinks Major is coming off his trolley. I suppose a 30-point poll deficit gets under even the toughest hide. He has induced my namesake to give the Queen a new yacht, apparently to appease the middle class. This is ridiculous. The middle classes do not care about yachts. Now Major wants to revive the school cadet corps, a typical Boy Scout idea. Nobody who ever "did corps" could possibly believe it a vote-winner. Young Portillo apparently craves a private army, presumably to attend his enthronement as Holy Roman Emperor at the Escorial.

list. Matthew Parris says that what the party needs there is fruitcake, not some vanilla-flavoured pixie". I am told mark is defama tory, but may be supportive in certain circles. God knows what's going on. Major has let Howard completely off the leash. Myra Hindley has been roused from obscurity to be told, via the Daily Mail, that she will stay in jug until she dies. Tacky, even for this bunch. The wags are saying, come election day, Howard wants to drag her from her cell, pump her full of bullets before the cameras — then demand the leadership by acclamation.

I am torn between desperately wanting to get back into the House and give the Right a moral lead, and yearning for the lot of them to be given the thrashing of their lives by that smarmy Blair.

Saltwood, Wednesday January 22: Sometimes, just sometimes, the sun shines. Down to the final four for Squiffy Scott's old seat. At least it's a constituency where one could contemplate spending a night. Come to that, I remember one or two nights in that part of town. I wonder if, horror of horrors, they might be on the selection committee. Ageing is dreadful. One day a. mini-skirted secretary is walking you upstairs to bed, the next she's a Tory councillor and has your whole future by the short hairs. A man is defenceless against this sort of thing. Damn Flaubert.

i am fighting the classic trio from Conservative Central Casting: a dreary right-wing lawyer who will doubtless be chosen as "leadership potential, a statutory local council for whom they dare not omit, and an inevitable North-Country skirt. Some ghoul from Central Office will doubtless demand to know why none of us is black. I am clearly the bit of fun on the side. Still, it's a tremendous boost to be up in lights again. Bill in the village seemed really pleased.

The reptiles will do for me by endlessly repeating page 123 (earlier diary reference to his Plymouth officials as "petty, malign, clumsily conspiratorial") and picking over the character thing. I was chulled when a prat on television asked an adorable association member what she thought of me, and she said she just wanted to "see me in the flesh". I find this strangely erotic. It is the kind of battle I admit I enjoy. Anyway it is probably Clark's Last Stand, the final thrust of the lance before Alzheimer's closes over me. I had a call in the midst of all this from William who said a heron had been worrying the mallards again. l told him to call the Home Secretary and invite him to garrotte

Alhany, Thursday January 23, AM: The big day I feel like Cardigan at Baladaya, breaking his horse from a trot to a canter and crying, "Here goes the last of, Brudenells." I remember fondly how in days gone by there would be that cosseting call from Herself, a verbal pat on the knee and a slight stirring in the loins. I still dream of going through fire and water for Her. Funny stuff, adrenalin. The bowels are back in order.

I began at Saltwood with Jane at her most sweet and supportive. Shedid the eggs and we discussed the DBS versus the Bernley. I decided one is Chelsea, the other Kensington, but which to drive? When the two associations merged in the Seventies, relations were poisonous. Arty Chelsea types couldn't abide the Kensington toffs. I should have found out if Charles Chelseastill has any clout down there, but I imagine the King's Road poujadistes ended his droit de seigneur long ago. The fact is I haven't the patience to sit in public libraries mugging up on local issues. So it will have to be Charmer Clark. Honesty Clark, Elder Statesman to the Aid of the Party Clark. We decide on the Bentley. It is more dignified in defeat.

Saltwood, Friday January 23: What a marvellous creature the Conservative Party is. I was so nervous leaving Albany I almost winged a BMW 840 coupé in the courtyard. The loss of no-claims bonus alone would have cost me a Hispano-Suiza. Kensington Town Hall was ghastly, like a comprehensive school canteen. I spoke well (really), much better than last week when frankly I stumbled. Being 68 was probably a plus. The older members (which is most of them) treated me as a young roue, while the younger ones doubt if I can make it to the millennium. Then they can have the fun of pretending to select a prime minister again.

Congratulations poured in from Jonathan, Perry and the Brute. They said I was just what the party needed and I should not hold myself back. I am too old not to be flattered. Who knows? Palmerston. Disraeli, Asquith, Churchill were all party leaders over 70. One thing I have learnt Compared to the sycophants and schemers in Westminster and Downing Street, politics has nothing half as sensible or decent as a local Conservative association. Those people are sheer unadulterated good judgment. We must make more use of it.

Castle, Alan Clark's castellated home in Kent, were cut short yesterday when one of his rottweilers saw off a BBC cameraman leaving a tear in his trousers and blood on his leg.

Clark was with his charming wife Jane at Saltwood, basking in the glory of his election to fight for Kensington & Chelsea in place of the disgraced MP Sir Nicholas Scott. The family rottwellers Hannah (named after Hannah Reich. Hitler's test-pilot) and Leni (after Leni Riefenstahl. Hitler's film director) were locked up when journalists began to arrive.

But after the crowds had disappeared. Leni and Hannah burst excitedly from their holder and headed for the BBC team who had remained behind. Mrs Clark sprang into action, calling them. But she was too late: the playful girls had cornered the television crew and one of them jumped up and caught his leg just as she was imploring restraint.

Clark's household was said to be mortified by the incident but his detractors are already using his dogs as ammunition. "Typical of him to keep rottweilers," commented one, "large, flashy and arrogant opened in the West End with the all-girl cabaret act Fascinating Alda on Thursday night.

The diplomats now stand foursquare with seamen, bus drivers truck drivers and many workers in Greece, which recently suffered a nationwide strike. The protests are against stringent economic policies designed to enable Greece to join a single currency.

In the show's finale, the girls run into the auditorium, their sequinned ballgowns billowing behind them; they clatter up the steps and out through the foyer. Then, in their finery, they have to get back to their dressing rooms — and the only route is down a dark, bin-filled alley littered with detritus and the odd tramp. As a direct descendant of William of Orange, Issy is accustomed to red-carpet treatment. "Now that I'm in the West End, I thought I wouldn't have to do draughty corridors," she pouts.

THE BENEFITS BATTLE

Blair treads confidently in Lilley's footsteps

The Left has long believed that the answer to poverty is higher benefits. At the last election, Labour's flagship policy was to increase child benefit and pensions. Yesterday Tony Blair reiterated his new Labour position that "the best form of welfare for people of working age is work". As he awaits the electorate's praise for a sinner repented, there is a prospect now that, whoever wins the election, the next government will tackle poverty by pulling people out of dependency, not throwing extra pounds at them.

Peter Lilley, the current Social Security Secretary, has been trying to do just this for five years. Step by step, he has reformed the benefit system so that it contains fewer disincentives to take a job. Through family credit, which sustains families on low wages, to childcare allowances, which permit parents to spend some of their earnings on childcare before their benefit is withdrawn, Mr Lilley's reforms have helped unemployment to fall much faster after this last recession than it did in the 1980s.

But much more change is needed. One of the questions for voters this year will be which party is more likely to deliver it. Mr Blair claims that, like Nixon visiting China, only the party that built the welfare state will be trusted to reform it. It is certainly easier for him than for John Redwood to address. the problem of single parents without being accused of scapegoating. The Tory style is better suited to attacking unpopular targets, such as trade unions, Argentinians or Brussels bureaucrats. Labour is better trusted to deal with "cuddly" groups, such as nurses or single parents.

Yet Labour has pressures on it too. The full costs of the policy are not yet clear. The poverty lobby has vocal supporters in the Labour Party, and not all its members are signed up to new Labour's "welfare-to-work" model. Mr Blair will be relying heavily on support from voluntary organisations who went through their own transformations in the 1980s and are now more hard-headed in their approach.

Many of Labour's welfare reforms have already been tested in Australia. Chief among these is the proposal to encourage more lone mothers back to work, outlined yesterday in Mr Blair's speech. British lone parents are entitled to benefit, with few questions asked, until their youngest child reaches 16. This is in stark contrast to most other European countries. The result is that only 41 per cent of lone mothers in Britain work, compared with 82 per cent in France and 70 per cent in Sweden.

Labour could, eventually, compel them to take up opportunities for work or training, as it intends to do for the young unemployed. That might be the best way of cutting the spiralling costs to the State of lone parenthood; and of deterring young women from embarking on such a state-financed career. From April, Mr Lilley will be piloting his Parent Plus programme, which will use private employment agencies to help lone parents back to work. The Tories, like Labour, have recognised the importance of after-school and holiday clubs to look after children while their mothers are working. But, nationwide, there are only 72,000 such places for the 1.3 million children of lone parents on benefit. There is much more to be done. Around 90 per cent of ione mothers claim that they would work if they could. It is hard for them to complain of being victimised if they are offered a reasonable chance to do so.

ISLAM'S THREAT

The agonies of Algeria send warnings to the north

At a farm on the outskirts of Algiers this vulnerability of its urban centres to a few week 15 members of one family, including ten women, were hacked to death. In a village south of Algiers, guerrillas murdered a boy and his father on their way to school. These were just the latest of more than 500 students and teachers to die at the hands of Algeria's ferocious Armed Islamist Group (GIA) since 1994, when it warned students to boycott schools because their studies hampered its holy war against the Government.

The killing campaign is not confined to those seeking education. In a garrisch town a bomb placed in a market killed egent and wounded ten; in one small handlet affire two explosions within four days killed thany more. Within the space of this past week, at least five bombs have plunged Algeria into despair and fear; 17 more have been defused.

It is the poor and defenceless who are being deliberately singled out in the latest surge of homicidal attacks by the GIA guerrillas. Their assault on the peaceable traditions of Ramadan, the Muslim holy month of fasting, seems almost designed to prove the questionable thesis of Samuel Huntingdon, the American academic who argues that Islamic society is inherently violent and intolerant.

For the mass of Algerians who believe nothing of the kind, and who voted last November for a new constitution in the hope that elections would heal the nation's agony, this escalation of a civil war that has claimed at least 60,000 lives is a deception beyond bitterness. For Algeria's near neighbours, including Morocco which has just launched a crackdown on extremist Islam in the universities, the fear of contagion is a penetrating anxiety.

In France, even though the overwhelming majority of its large Maghrebian population are law-abiding French citizens, a massive police operation is required to limit the the energies of EU governments.

terrorist cells. Yet much of Western Europe has yet to take seriously the notion that Europe's southern frontier may need as much attention as its east. The very nature of the doctrines espoused by Islam's radical underworld makes it difficult to see what the non-Muslim world can do.

Insofar as poverty and unemployment breed extremism - which is true to differing degrees in Algeria, Egypt and Morocco closer economic co-operation between the European Union and North Africa is obviously desirable. But that does not deal with the concentration of too much of these countries' wealth in too lew hands. Islamis extremism is the latest throw of the political dice after the failed experiments of Nasserist pan-Arabism and Baathist socialism. But there is understandable nervousness about lecturing the region's rulers on free speech and democracy when they are confronted by a primitive, dynamic Islam which denounces the idea of rendering any power unto Caesar as a blasphemous and alien imposition of infidel culture.

Algeria's President Zeroual has scomed mediation so far. But that may be needed if he is to bring in from the political cold such important Algerian minorities as the Berbers, whose participation is vital if the GIA is to be neutralised. King Hassan of Morocco has manoeuvred skilfully to open up the parliamentary system and to bring one at least of the country's Islamist organisations into the political mainstream. External investment and encouragement have helped to nudge this process forward. Europeans cannot be sure whether instability in the Maghreb will affect them directly. But what is certain is that if it did, this would be an issue greater by far than most of the business that currently absorbs

DIRTY DANCING

Step, step, glide, glide, kick, kick; kindly leave the floor

Dancing has finally been given its disciplinary code. And not before time, to judge from the barging, aggression and the other cold-blooded professional fouls on the floor we report today. Dance News, the Wisden of the dancing world, is publishing a code of conduct drawn up by the world's glittering twinkle-toed experts. Couples who break it should be given the dance equivalent of a yellow card, and then sent off.

Sentimentalists regret the need for such a code: But it marks the final transition of ballroom dancing from a genteel courting ritual to a fiercely competitive sport at which fortunes are made. This is the last sport at which Britain still leads the world, in expertise, tuition and prize money. Competitors from all over the world have brought the manners of the football stadium and boxing ring to the dancefloor. If dancing is to be recognised as an Olympic sport, as it probably will be in June, it now has to clean up its act. A rich casket of gold medals should then open. Britain would have won twice as many medals at the last Olympics if dancing had been included as a sport, as it was in the ancient world. When the Victorians codified sports and games for the world. The Times played a prominent part in their deliberations and legislation. So should it now for these newer sports. The dress regulations of the dancers' code are fair, so far as they go. For safety as well as propriety, it is prudent to rule that competitors must stop and replace their shoes sport at which who dares to dance wins.

immediately if they fall off during a dance. Otherwise a rival might try to disable them by a stab with a stiletto heel. Much worse has happened on the Olympic ice-rink. The code may need to be more radical still. It should consider whether it is sensible for its athletes to dress as head waiters, debutantes or flappers. To judge from the latest fashions in equally robust sports, something clinging in Lycra would be more efficient.

It is all very well for the code to declare that competitors must at all times dance anti-clockwise around the floor and avoid collisions. But this rule will prove impossible to enforce, with 24 couples all pushing to catch the judges' eyes. Ballroom dancing has always been the art of getting one's feet out of the way faster than one's partner can step on them. But the sport should now consider changing the shape of the dancefloor from open plan to the shape of a flat ring or torus, in order to force all competitors to proceed in order around the same circular track. The floor should have a long central barrier. with turning posts at either end, as in chariot-racing. As with ancient charioteers, rules are evidently needed against bumping and boring, unfairly whipping the opposition with coattails or feathered frocks, and excess mascara in an event that is part sport, part theatre. The code will broaden and deepen over the years. The first step is the one that counts, recognising that ballroom dancing is no longer a ritual governed by etiquetie. It is a

From Mr Benedict Birnberg

Sir, Sir Stanley Kalms and other businessmen (lener, January 23) argue that a minimum wage would be bad for British business because it would lead to job losses. Even if this proposition is well founded, do our doubtless maximum-waged business leaders no longer regard it relevant to consider the morality or social consequences for the community of the impoverishment to which the absence of a minimum wage contributes?

Yours faithfully, BENEDICT BIRNBERG. 4 Eliot Place, Blackheath, SE3. January 23.

From Mr Ian McCariney, MP for Makerfield (Labour)

Sir, I was surprised to read John Hoerner, from Burtons, Lord Wolfson of Sunningdale, from GUS, and Lord Sainsbury of Preston Candover at-tacking the minimum wage in their

In June 1996 one of Mr Hoerner's senior colleagues told Labour that the minimum wage should "provide a simple form of protection for individuals at work"; in September a director of GUS, Jonathan Charkham, said of Labour, "above all the party wants to pursue practical and sensible policies"; and Lord Sainsbury is at odds with his chairman, David Sainsbury. a contributor to the report by the Com-mission on Public Policy and British Business, which called for a minimum wage (reports and leading article, January 22).

Of the other two signatories to the letter, one, Archie Norman, of Asda. is a wannabe Tory MP; and the other. Sir Stanley Kalms, of Dixons, is a long-term Tory paymaster. Their opposition to a minimum wage must be taken with a large bag of salt.

Only they could ignore the business case for the minimum wage. This will reduce staff turnover, increase quality in goods and services, boost demand in the local economy and reduce the £3.4 billion bill for benefits to top up low pay, which is funded by taxes on

Under Labour the level of the national minimum wage will be recommended by a low-pay commission, on which employers, employee represen-tatives and independents will sit. This will take full account of the economic circumstances of the time All independent business surveys show growing support for a minimum wage. Business is rejecting the low-pay or no-pay strategy of the Tories. Stanley Kalms et al are increasingly isolated on this issue

Yours sincerely. IAN McCARTNEY (Labour Employment Spokesperson). House of Commons.

From Dr R. Butler

Sir, Given the enormous amounts of money paid to the likes of Mrs Horlick and Chris Evans, is there not a case for introducing a national maximum wage?

R. BUTLER, Brackenholm, Methven Road. Grange-over-Sands, Cumbria.

From the Shadow Environment Minister

Sir, It is worrying that because of politically motivated attacks by the Conservatives, the working-time directive is so misunderstood. Any small business's fear of a 48-hour week is misplaced since, as you reported (Business, January 17), nearly every employee who works over 48 hours a week does so voluntarily. These workers will still be able to work extra hours under the new provisions.

It is employees who are forced to work long hours by the minority of cowboy and irresponsible employers, causing stress and risking accidents, who will be protected in future. We will strongly support the CBI and the majority of responsible employers in their desire to reduce the massive costs of poor health and safety practice in the UK.

The 67 per cent of small businesses who are said to oppose the directive on the ground that working hours should be decided between employer and worker need have no fear, since this is integral to the new measures.

Yours sincerely. GRAHAM ALLEN, Room 506, 7 Millbank, SWI. January 21.

From Mr John Hunter

Sir, In his luxuriant tribute (January 18) to the Green Man - the mysterious human face engulfed in foliage commonly found in medieval art and sculpture - Simon Jenkins posits a number of awesome spirit connections and manifestations that are pure fantasy.

I have found not a jot of evidence to link the Green Man with the Druids, wicker giants, the maypole, Puck. Jack-in-the-Green, or any other guise that Jenkins suggests, other than coffee-table books and New Age musings on television. That is not evi-

Some twenty years ago Kathleen Basford, whose latest book gives rise to Jenkins's article, authoritatively showed the Green Man's origins in Roman art of the 1st century AD, his marvellous development in the Middle Ages, and his rapid fading away at the Reformation and Renaissance. Jack-in-the-Green, associated with May Day, ales, pub signs and chimney sweeps, appears much later and is a secular not sacred figure. The pedi-gree of the "wild man of pageant and heraldry" is well known and is not related to the Green Man.

I admire the Green Man as much as Simon Jenkins and feel it a disservice to cloak this wonderful figure with fantasies and fictions. He does not need them.

Yours faithfully, JOHN HUNTER, The Market Cross. Thaxted, Essex. January 18.

From Mr Malcolm Brockleshy

Sir. Not all Green Men are portrayed in the bizarre act of discorging foliage from their heads. Many are, but some simply peer out from leaves and branches, as at Southwell Minster, in Nottinehamshire: some, like the formidable Green Man at Bamberg, in Bavaria, wear foliate masks, while in other cases the face is an integral part of a carved leaf.

Some are indeed grotesque or menacing, but the majority appear benign and frequently seem worned. Were these carvings "green" reminders that have been watching us over the ages, with their troubled expressions, trying to warn us of the dangers we were in-curring? If so, we should heed them. not disparage them,

Mr Jenkins concludes on a sour note, predicting that, with the collapse of civilisation, the trees will reclaim the British Isles and the Green Man will have the last grimace. But his sensitive article on trees last year (October 26) finished in a much more positive vein, looking forward to majestic regeneration of our woodlands. Guarding a great tree, he wrote, "is a gesture of futurity, the nearest thing we get to touching eternity. There is no optimism to match that of the true woodman".

Perhaps there is more of the Green Man in Simon Jenkins than he cares

Yours faithfully.

Military cadet force plan for schools

From the Chief Executive of the National Youth Agency

Sir, Plans to spend millions expanding the military cadet force (reports, January 23) show a rather odd choice of priorities. At £6S million government support for the cadet force is already 20 times its help to the rest of the voluntary youth service put together. What about some more support to the Scouts, Guides, and Woodcraft Folk? What about a boost to the thousands of voluntary youth clubs building self-esteem and providing new experiences for young people who, like the young Major and Portillo, are not attracted to the military?

Young people, especially the most vulnerable, need a variety of opportunities and too many of these have been cut back in recent years.

Yours etc. TOM WYLIE. Chief Executive, National Youth Agency. 17-23 Albion Street, Leicester. January 23.

From Brigadier R. C. Wolverson

Sir, I am sorry that you chose to illustrate today's report on page I about the Government's plans to extend the military cadet organisation with a 40-year-old picture. Things change — not least the front page of The Times. which once had only announcements and notices.

A sense of individual responsibility, the value of teamwork and good citizenship are developed by undertaking challenging activites and by contributing to local communities.

Yours faithfully, CHRISTOPHER WOLVERSON. Rock House, Halse, Somerset.

From Mr Adrian R. D. Norman

Sir. Young people could get most of the benefits of CCF training without learning to use weapons if they could opt for a modern "civil defence" section. This would require them to be as disciplined, fit and loyal as their military counterparts and offer as much opportunity for adventure and comradeship. Their models would in-clude, for example, HM Coastguard. the police, the emergency services, St John Ambulance and mountain rescue teams.

From Mr Alan Blyth

Sir, Surely the cause of better upbringing would be much better served by providing proper funding for children's musical education (now starved of money) rather than the guns the Prime Minister is proposing?

Yours faithfully. ALAN BLYTH. 22 Shilling Street, Lavenham, Suffolk. January 23.

From Mr John Elder

Sir. The assumption by Chris Woodhead, the Chief Inspector of Schools (report, January 22), that young viewers are incapable of discriminating between fictional TV comedy characters such as Del Boy and Rodney (who, incidentally almost always get things wrong) and role models does them a disservice. Similarly, Waterstone's customers and Channel 4 viewers may not have felt that they were being asked to vote objectively for The Lord of the Rings as "the greatest work of English literature this century" (as lamented by Mr Woodhead) but, in the absence of any other criteria, subjectively for the books which made the greatest impact on them personally - not necessarily the same thing.

Yours faithfully, J. ELDER, 31 Thornbury Avenue. Southampton, Hampshire. January 23.

SAS ban

Sir. According to your report today. General Sir Peter de la Billière had to telephone the MoD to find out that he is no longer welcome at SAS regimental functions. What an unbelievable means of informing anyone in the first place and what a disgraceful way to treat the most decorated, successful and popular general that the British Army has had since the Second World War.

From Mr Nick Beeson

Sir, Unlike Mr Woodhead, I am delighted that The Lord of the Rings has been chosen as the nation's favourite book. A "favourite" is surely the warm familiar object to which you return time and again - not necessarily the best, but the most comfortable.

I frequently return to Tolkien after clambering through the intellectual peaks. Besides, Tolkien's work is a splendid starting point to explore other literature: Homer. Virgil. Dante, Chaucer would all be less daunting to a first-time reader who had read Tolkien.

I would never claim that Tolkien wrote great literature. However, Mr Woodhead should be grateful that the nation did not choose one of the many blockbusters" of the bestseller list which provide an introduction to

From Brigadier J. F. Rickett

MoD policy seems to have vacillated from one extreme to another: clearing his books for publication in the first place (there were in any case no secrets which would endanger the realm in them) and then pillorving the author three years after the event. Small wonder that standards and country. It is just as well, given the Prime Minister's initiative on youth joining the cadets, that General Sir Peter de la Billière is President of the Army Cadet

Millennial plan to 'finish' cathedral

From Mr Nicholas Rav

Sir. Your article on the application to the Millennium Commission by St Edmundsbury Cathedral in Suffolk (January 20) suggests that the highest aspiration for the design of the new tower is that it should be virtually indistinguishable from the ancient work, on the analogy of Stephen Dykes Bower's haldacchino at the east end of St Paul's. This is to over-simplify an architectural issue. Some of the very best and most moving Gothic buildings in this country, such as Pearson's Truro Cathedral, were created in the 19th century by architects with a deep knowledge of the style they were working in and a passionate conviction in what they were doing. There is certainly no spirit of the age which authenticates a single style for today; opportunistic pastiche is always disastrous, but au-thentic architecture can be made in a revivalist style when the architect has both the skill and conviction to do it. Dykes Bower's own chancel additions at Bury St Edmunds are excellent, but not because they are indistinguishable from earlier work. At a seminar at Bury St Edmunds on September 25, 1996, attended by 100 people from many disciplines, the tower proposal, designed by Dykes Bower and assembled by A. M. Rome, which is now before the Millennium Commission, was welcomed as a design with the capability of matching the highest standards of Gothic revivalist archi-

As the Provost points out, this noble tower would have a greater chance than most Millennium-funded projects of being welcomed, in due course, into the third millennium.

Yours sincerely, NICHOLAS RAY, University of Cambridge, Department of Architecture. 1 Séroope Terrace, Cambridge. January 21.

From the Reverend P. L. S. Barrett

Sir, St Edmundsbury is a flourishing cathedral, its completion would be an excellent way of celebrating the mil-

But I cannot agree with the comment by one of the parishioners that "cathedral building is dying in our country". Fine new cathedrals have been built during this century at Liv-erpool, Guildford and Coventry. Portsmouth Cathedral has been completed as recently as 1991. At several cathedrals, including St Albans. Chelmsford, Southwark, Winchester and Hereford - and, indeed, St Ednundsbury — splendid new ancillary buildings have been erected. More are being planned.

The last 30 years have seen English cathedrals burgeoning with astonishing new life. This was endorsed by the Howe Commission in its report Heritage and Renewal (1994). They are ready to enter the new millennium with hope and confidence.

Yours faithfully, PHILIP BARRETT. The Rectory, Kiln Lane. Otterbourne, Winchester, Hampshire. January 20.

From the Provost of Sheffield

Sir, I am sure the Millennium Commission should support the completion of St Edmundsbury Cathedral and I wish my colleague James Atwell, the Provost, every success with his application.

However, St Edmundsbury is not England's "only incomplete cathe-dral" as you said in your report. Sheffield parish church was also elevated to cathedral status earlier this century, and an ambitious scheme to turn the medieval building round by 90° and vastly enlarge it was initiated by Sir Charles Nicholson. He finished what would have been the new high sanctuary, lady chapel, chapter house and vestries, but construction of the nave was due to begin on the day after the Second World War was declared.

After the war, funds were insufficient and it was never built. A modest extension was added in the 1960s instead. The result is an intriguing if endearing building that faces both ways. The word "unfinished" is written all over it, but perhaps there is an important theological point in that. Where the great nave door would have been, the Sheffield Supertram now collects passengers from the cathedral stop.

Yours faithfully. MICHAEL SADGROVE. The Cathedral Church of St Peter and St Paul. Sheffield, South Yorkshire. January 20.

MARY BANCROFT

Mary Bancroft, American spy and writer, died on January 10 aged 93. She was born on October 29, 1903.

ntil the Second World War, Mary Bancroft's life followed the normal conventions for a young American woman of her class and age. Then, after she had opted to remain in Zurich with her second husband, her adventures began to read like the stuff of spy thrillers. As mistress of Allen Dulle (later Director of the CIA), Bancroft did essential work for its forerunner, the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), gathering information on the German Resistance and on Yugoslav Partisans. Forty years later, she provided an entertaining account of the work done by the OSS in her memoirs, Autobiography of a Spy (1983).

Bancroft had always longed for the chance of an exciting job. Born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, she was educated locally. Her father was a lawyer and journalist, and her Irish mother had died of an embolism when she was a few hours old. Her stepmother's stepfather. Clarence Barron, was easily the greatest influence upon her.

Publisher of The Wall Street Journal and friend to President Calvin Coolidge, he advised Mary to go out and meet people from all walks of life - "even gamblers and crooks. Always study them and learn to differentiate clearly between the good and the bad."
This early habit of discrimination stood her in good stead in Switzerland. when she was called upon to decide which German contacts might be double agents.

An early stultifying marriage to a childhood friend, Sherwin Badger. from which she had two children, ended in divorce in 1932. She married the second time, in 1935, to Jean Rufenacht, a Swiss banker. This was: an equally bad choice but one which did not interfere so much with Bancroft's private life, as her husband was often away, travelling on business. Living in Zurich in Rufenacht's absence, she wrote articles and became friends with Carl Jung and, after James Joyce's death in 1941, with his widow Nora.

Eager to do whatever she could for the Allied cause during the war, she was introduced to Allen Dulles at the Baur au Lac hotel in December 1942. Dulles was described as the new special assistant to the American minister: "My instantaneous impression was that he would never be anybody's assistant — at least not for long," she later wrote of him. In fact, Dulles was scouning among Americans in Switzerland to see who would be suitable to work for the OSS that was to be established in Berne. On his second meeting with Bancroft he blurted out: "It should work out very well. We can let the work cover the romance - and the romance cover the work."

As Dulles predicted, Bancroft be-came his hardest-working, lowest-paid assistant - and his mistress. Her task was to analyse the German press, and to make contacts with those scores of refugees and spies pouring into Switzerland who seemed sympathetic to the Allied cause.

Her most important work was done with Hans Bernd Gisevius, who was a top official in the Abwehr - the intelligence department of the OKW

(Wehrmacht High Command). Gisevius knew many of the generals and other highly-placed civilians in Germany who were to participate in the failed assassination attempt of July 20, 1944. While Bancroft and her English friend Elizabeth Scott-Montagu translated Gisevius's secretly-written manuscript on the Nazi cover-un surrounding the Reichstag fire, Bancroft questioned him about the German Resistance. Her favourable reports of the man to Dulles did much to establish the credibility of the Resistance movement with Anglo-

Americans. Through Bancroft's Yugoslav contacts, Dulles also learnt that the man to deal with in the country was Josip Broz, known to his followers as Tito, and not General Mihajlović.

Dulles was a man of fixed routines Every week Bancroft visited him in Berne, dined with him, discussed her weekly report, and then helped him to prepare the nightly phone call which he made to the United States. Because these were presumably being listened to by the Germans, no hard intelligence gathered by American agents was included in the reports. Still, in America, they were awaited with excitement. When all the business was out of the way Dulles and Bancroft would engage in what she described as "a bit of a dalliance".

With Bancroft's husband Jean away travelling and Dulles's wife Clover in America, they tried to be discreet. But Dulles did occasionally take terrible risks. Once he burst into Bancroft's apartment in Zurich shortly after the maid had left to go shopping, and told her: "Quick. I've got a very tricky meeting coming up. I want to clear my head." Dusting himself down moments later he said: "Thanks. That's just what I needed," and rushed off to his meeting.

Other women might have grown tired of being used as a head-clearing device, but Bancroft enjoyed the uncertainties of her profession until the end of the war. Exhausted, she then decided not to take up Dulles's request that she accompany him to Germany to set up the OSS there. She left the service and took her reward in the form of an invitation to watch the Nuremberg trials, to which Gisevius had been called as a witness.

Her descriptions of the trials were a highpoint of her memoirs: "When I entered the Nuremberg courtroom. von Ribbentrop, his face the colour of Camembert cheese, was on the stand." she wrote. "He seemed to have no idea why he found himself in his present humiliating position. In his opinion he had never done anything wrong. Beside Goering sat Rudolf Hess, staring catatonically into space. He looked unterly demented like a character out of The Cabinet of Dr Caligari."

After the war, and now divorced from her second husband, she remained in Zurich for seven years, and worked on multilingual films and commentary for documentaries. Returning to the US in 1952 she wrote two novels and her memoirs. She remained friends with Dulles and his wife until their deaths, and her circle expanded to include Woody Allen and Henry Luce, the founder of Time.

The son of her first marriage predeceased her. She is survived by her daughter Mary-Jane, who married Horace Taft, the son of Senator Robert Taft.

CHARLES CRAIG

Charles Craig, tenor, died on January 23 aged 77. He was born in London on December 3, 1919.

CHARLES CRAIG was one of the few British lyric-dramatic tenors to emerge in the postwar years. Although he began his career in lighter roles, he became most noted for his reading of Otello in Verdi's opera. which he sang with marked success both in Britain and abroad, conveying the power and the pathos of the strenuous part. He may not have been a particularly skilled actor, but he managed by the sincerity and commitment of his performance of this and other parts to convey their essence. Because his technique was soundly based and his voice therefore wore well, he was able to continue to sing into his sixties.

Craig was the youngest of 15 children. Although he was interested in singing from a young age, the need to earn a living from the age of 16 initially prevented him from pursuing it as a career. During the war, however, when he was in the Army, he was able to try out his voice at concerts and then joined the entertainments unit, singing arias all learnt by ear.

Once the war was over, he summoned up his courage to write to Covent Garden, Karl Rankl, then music director. and David Webster, administrator, auditioned him. They acknowledged his instinctive talent by taking him into the chorus with the promise of solo roles, though none of significance materialised.

In 1951. Sir Thomas Beecham auditioned him for The Bohemian Girl, which he was to conduct at Covent Garden. Beecham played the piano himself and at one point shouted at the bewildered tenor: "You'll have to leave here. We will have to sponsor your training and get the money somewhere."

Good as his word, Beecham financed Craig's ruition with Dino Borgioli and paid him a salary at the same time so that he could leave the chorus. A concert with Beecham conducting Craig in Liszt's Psalm 13 and a recording with the Mass of Life in 1952, and Craig was on his way.

A contract with the Carl Rosa company followed. With them, Craig learnt his basic repertory singing a well-re-membered Des Grieux (in Puccini's Manon Lescasse; and the title role in the first British performances of Berlioz's opera Benvenuto Cellini. He was also a distinguished Rodolfo (La Bohème) for the Carl Rosa, a part he first performed in 1953.

Sadler's Wells Opera then employed him - as Samson, Luigi (Il Tabarro). Cavaradossi and Andrea Chenier, showing the weight of his voice. In 1959, he appeared as the Prince in the first British performances of Dvorak's Rusalka, with Joan Hammond in the title role. The same year he at last fulfilled his ambition — to sing a major part in the Royal Opera House. It was as Pinkerton to Sena Jurinac's Butterfly. He was immediately hailed for his Italianate style. Turiddu followed, in the premiere of the Zeffirelli staging, then

same conductor of Delius's A Radames, Canio, Calafamong other roles. Meanwhile he sang Siegmund in Scottish Opera's first Ring in 1966.

Craig was soon in regular demand abroad, particularly in Berlin, where his Otello was most admired, and the United States. He was not always successful. Early in 1972, the audience in Parma, a notoriously difficult house, soundly booed his Otello and he retired after the first act. But he did eventually sing the part at La Scala and then, towards the end of his career, at Covent Garden and at the English National Opera, in Jonathan Miller's production. The latter was recorded in 1983 and is a fair memento of Craig's achievement. He also leaves some earlier discs which show his voice in its prime, among them extracts from Butterfly with Marie Collier, often his stage partner. His tenor was firm, resonant, with baritonal tints. He revealed a genuine legato in his singing and a fair ability to colour his tone.

THE VEN RENNIE SIMPSON

The Ven Rennie Azchdeacon of Macclesfield, 1978-85, died on January 9 aged 76. He was born on January 13, 1920.

ALTHOUGH a Northerner by origin, Rennie Simpson spent probably the happiest vears of his ministry as Precentor of Westminster Abbey between 1963 and 1974. After being seriously ill, he left London in 1974 to accept a residentiary canonry at Chester, where he soon became Vice-Dean.

He found life, however, in a provincial cathedral constricting after all the variety of activities at Westminster, and it was with some relief that in

From the start, Rennie Simpson's had been a slightly unorthodox ecclesiastical career. He was one of the very few Church of England dignitaries of his generation to be a non-graduate (though after 1970 he was able to wear a Cambridge hood, having been awarded a Lambeth MA by Michael Ramsey). His education had been at Blackburn Technical College and he trained for the ministry at Kelham. Ordained in 1945, he served his title in the mining town of South Elmshall just south of Pontefract, though his next move - to become Precentor of Blackburn Cathedral determine his future. After three years at Blackburn he was in 1952 appointed to the college of minor canons at St Paul's Cathedral; he spent six years there, combining his duties at the cathedral with being a deputy Priest-in-Ordinary to the Queen, which meant he was available to sing services at the Chapel Royal. At St Paul's his obvious spirituality made a deep impres-sion - not least on the Dean, W. R. Matthews, under whom he served (in his retirement Matthews asked Simpson to director). St Paul's was not the happiest of Chapters at the time but. from the perspective of a still

(he had a lovely singing voice) relatively young man, who came a familiar figure at one that was to was busy also as chaplain to Stamford Bridge (he was an the Great Ormand Street Children's Hospital, Simpson made his own contribution to creating a friendlier atmo> sphere. In 1958 he was offered the opportunity to run a large parish of his own. John Keble Church, Mill Hill, had a vast, mixed population of more than 100,000 souls and, with a sizeable team of curates at the vicar's disposal, a tradition of producing future C of E leaders. If Simpson himself did not immediately become one of those, it was because, after no more than five years there, he received an invitation that he felt he could not refuse.

The precentorship of Westminster Abbey does not in itself rate as a senior appointment - unlike in some other cathedrals, it does not carry a canonry along with it, and the occupier of the precentor's stall holds no seat on the Chapter (nor, for that matter, after a Privy Council judgment of the early 1950s, does he even enjoy a freehold). Yet Simpson, at the age of 43 and as a highly regarded suburban vicar, had no hesitation about accepting the offer made to him. The prospect of playing his part, along with the organist and master of the choristers, in producing the Abbey's music doubtless had something to with that; but so also did his swift recognition that it was just the sort of job that would yield him the chance of touching life at many different angles.

In his II years living in Little Cloister, Westminster, Simpson did exactly that. He beardent Chelsea supporter) played an active part in the life of the City of London (serving as chaplain to both the Society of Apothecaries and to the Company of Wax Chandlers. even writing an official grace for the latter); and was, above all, a model team player in the far-from-Barsetshire life that circulates around Dean's Yard and College Garden.

It fell to him, in particular, to assume responsibility for a large part of the arrangements for the marriage service of Princess Anne to Captain Mark Phillips in 1973 and, working in close harmony with both Eric Abbott and Edward Carpenter, he also more than maintained the high standards of the Abbey's liturgy and worship. In his later years at Westminster this was a notable achievement, since in the 1970s he became a victim of bowel cancer, his life being despaired of on more than one occasion.

Eventually, thanks to the healing ministry of Eric Abbott, he made a full recovery and was able to live an active life for another 20 years, only resigning as Chaplain to the Queen - a post to which he had been appointed in 1982 five years after his official retirement as Archdeacon of Macclesfield. He had been made a Lieutenant of the Victorian Order on giving up his post as a Priest-in-Ordinary to the Queen, when he moved to Chester, in 1974. He is survived by his wife Margaret, whom he married in 1949, and by a son and a daughter.

WALLY WHYTON

Wally Whyton, skiffle singer and television and radio presenter, died of cancer on January 22 aged 67. He was born on September 23, 1929.

AS LEAD singer of the Vipers. Wally Whyton enjoyed a modest degree of fame in the late 1950s, the short-lived era of that endearing DIY brand of folk music known as skiffle. But unlike many who sank out of sight when the brief hour of the guitar, tea-chest bass and washboard combo came to an end, he went on to careers as a puppeteer in the ITV children's programme Small Time and later as presenter of the popular BBC Radio 2 programme Country Club. As the hand behind the glove puppet Pussy Cat Willum, he achieved national celebrity of a kind he never knew purely as a skiffle performer.

Born in London, Wally Whyton went to St Martin's Art School and started his working life as a commercial artist. But jazz and folk music had always been a passion with him and in the 1950s he teamed up with Tommy Steele, Hank Marvin, Jet Harris and Bruce Welch to form the Vipers.

Skiffle was momentarily all the rage. With its simple instrumental line-up -- broom handle stuck in tea-chest, kazoo, spoons, washboard rasped with thimble and, of course, acoustic guitar - it was an inexpensive way of producing a rhythmic, semimusical noise, and for 18 months it held sway over the coffee bar scene centred on Soho's 21s.

Lonnie Donegan, skiffle's exemplar, was always the Vipers' most dangerous rival and had immense success with Don't You Rock Me Daddy-O. which had actually been written by Whyton and was the group's first hit in 1957. They had brief notoriety when their version of Maggie May was banned by the BBC, and had two other chart entries with Cumberland Gan. and Streamline Train.

By the end of the Fifties the skiffle craze had run out of steam, with Steele by that time carving out a solo career and Marvin and Harris founding the Shadows. Whyton's career was for the next few years in television, and his puppeteering slots on ITV's Small Time and Five O'Clock Club were mandatory teatime viewing for children. When Pussy Cat Willum was killed off in 1965 there was what amounted to nationwide protest, with lisping infant letters bombarding ITV studios. Whyton moved to the BBC to present Play School.

He continued to write songs: Leave Them a Flower was a Sixties protest against the loss of green belt land. But his career was thereafter principally as a radio presenter, first from 1967 through Radio 1's Country Meets Folk and then. for twenty years from 1974, with Radio 2's Country Club. In the last he exercised an influence he had never had as a performer through his enthusiasm for Country music, and the programme had a large following.

He is survived by his wife Mary, a son and two daughters.

BOGUS TELEGRAM TO BISHOP

Curate fined for a "practical joke" (From Our Correspondent) Liverpool, Jan 24

There was a sequel at Liverpool Police Court today to a practical joke played by an Isle of Man dergyman in sending a bogus telegram to the Bishop of Sudor and Man, Dr James Denton Thompson, who was thereby induced to make a fruitless journey to Liverpool on the day when he should have moved the second reading of the Church Enabling Bill in the Legislative Council of the Isle of Man.

The Rev Walter James Karran, curate of St Matthew's, Douglas, pleaded "Guilty" to aiding and abetting Alice Mary Winstone. assistant manageress of a London cale, to uner a forged telegram purporting to be written by the Right Hon Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister, to Denton Thompson, Lord Bishop of Sodor and Man, on December 3."

He was fined £10 and ordered to pay 25 uineas costs. Mr Howard Roberts, for the Director of Public Prosecutions, said that Mr Karran was travelling on the steamer Mona from Douglas to Liverpool on December 3 with a lady acquaintance, Miss Winstone. He conceived the idea of sending a telegram to the

A curate's practical joke which involved sending a telegram to the Bishop of Sodor and Man asking him to meet the Prime Minister. Stanley Baldwin, ended with the curate in court.

Bishop purporting to come from Mr Stanley Baldwin, the Prime Minister, who was in Liverpool that day. He drafted a telegram as

"Denton Thompson, Bishop's Court, Kirk Michael, Isle of Man. Meet me Adelphi 3 tomorrow afternoon, most important --

He handed the paper to Miss Winstone, who on arrival at Liverpool made a copy of it and sent it to the telegraph office. The result was that the Bishop postponed an important engagement and proceeded to Liverpool. He learned at the Adelphi Hotel that the telegram was unauthorised and that Mr Baldwin had left Liverpool. A fortnight later the defendant went to the Chief Constable of the Isle of Man and made a statement to the effect that during the passage he said to the lady: "Let's have a joke on somebody. Let's send the Bishop a telegram." She replied: "You are always doing something foolish," or words to that effect.

Mr R.K. Chappell, defending, said that during the voyage the defendant was looking after Miss Winstone, who had been put in his charge by a friend. She was threatened with sickness, and he joked in order to distract her

The defendant's action was a practical joke. It had been rumoured in the island that the merits of the Bishop were likely to be rewarded with a diocese in England, and it was also rumoured that the Bishop would regard such a translation with equanimity. It occurred to Mr Karran that a message which might be taken to bear on the matter would be "an amusing leg-pull".

The magistrate, in imposing the fine, said that the explanation given as to why the Bishop might regard the telegram as genuine made the joke, if that was the proper name to be applied to it, a singularly offensive one. It would seem incredible to most people that a clergyman could do such a thing.

Downgraded profit forecast wipes 13 per cent off share price

Sainsbury issues warning

By SARAH CUNNINGHAM battered reputation of Sains-

SHARES of J Sainsbury plunged 13 per cent yestergroup gave a shock warning that its efforts to build sales and catch up with Tesco will mean profits this year well below even the most pessimistic City forecasts.

At one stage, nearly £1 billion was wiped off the group's stock market value and the Sainsbury family ended the day with its stake worth some £375 million less. The shares closed 51p down at 341p. The warning adds another large dent to the already bury's, formerly Britain's largest supermarket chain. "It is an appalling statement. Manday after the supermarkets agement credibility is at an alltime low," one analyst said.

Sainsbury said pre-tax profit in the year to March was likely to be £640 million to £650 million. Most forecasts were for about £700 million to £710 million. NatWest Markets lowered its forecast from £708 million to £648 million for 1996-97 and from £794 million to £704 million for the

Last May, Sainsbury announced its first fall in profits before tax against £809 million

The shortfall of £60 million on the profits expected this year has been blamed almost entirely on costs being higher than predicted. The company also announced an extra E50 million provision to convert Texas DIY stores to the Homebase format.

David Sainsbury, chairman. said £10 million would come off profits because of extra costs for the Reward loyalty card, which was launched in May. more than a year after Tesco's cessful Club card. A further £5 million will come off profits

E5 million because the group expected stores to be busier in early December and brought in extra staff in anticipation of a rush. But stores only became very busy in the last few days before Christmas.

Poor sales at former Texas stores and the closure of some kitchens sales areas within the stores will knock £10 million off profits. The cost of setting up its bank takes off £4 million more. The company still expects to launch the bank in the next few weeks. The final extra costs emerged in the US

Conditions on FirstBus deal suggest clampdown

THE large bus companies that prices and until we see what have grown rapidly by acquisition could be facing a tighter regulatory environment after the Department of Trade and Industry yesterday imposed tough conditions on the latest deal by FirstBus. The DTI has decided to force FirstBus to sell some parts of SB Holdings, the Scottish bus company that it has bought for £96 million. The department followed the advice of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission which ruled that FirstBus's purchase of SB Holdings was not in the public interest. The move prompted a warning from Brian Souter, chairman of Stagecoachi, regarded as the most aggressive of the bus companies, that the industry could face a tougher regime in future. He said: "Once Labour is in place and we know their policies, then we can move. But for now we have a sabbatical on acquisitions in this area because of high that it controls in Glasgow, as well as its Midland Bluebird operation. The large depot has both garaging and mainte-nance facilities supporting more than 120 buses. The DTI said: "FirstBus should identify a firm buyer within nine months of the publication of the MMC's report."

The MMC report, which was published yesterday, said that if FirstBus failed to identify a firm buyer "it should be required to divest SBH in its entirety". The DTI agreed with the MMC that the acquisition had eliminated competition between FirstBus and SBH and that the scale and dominance of the merged entity in central and south east Scotland was likely to deter competition from other operators.

FirstBus has become by far the largest operator in the region. SBH supplied 40 per cent of the bus services in the region. FirstBus already controlled a further 21 per cent. FirstBus bought SBH last year when Stagecoach was forced to sell a 21 per cent stake, which it had bought in 1994, after pressure from the MMC over competition. Rather than acquiring more UK bus companies, the larger operators could turn their attention to foreign purchase targets. Mr Souter said this

He said that his European ambitions had been ignited by the Swebus acquistion in Sweden last year. Stagecoach was looking to make further acquisitons in Scandinavia, he

NSM goes into administration with £140m debts

By Jason Nisse

NSM, the coalmine, was placed in administration late yesterday with debts of more than £140 million. It follows Coal Investments into the hands of the accountants, leaving RJB Mining and Rackwood as the UK's only quoted private coal companies.

NSM's shares were suspended at 8p just before Christmas while it attempted to finalise the sale of its Clee Hill plant hire side to pay off some of its debts. Less than two years ago the shares stood at more than 200p.

Arthur Andersen, which cut its teeth in the sector as receivers of Coal Investments, took control yesterday. The firm is expected to sell Clee Hill and the US mining interests in the next few weeks. A shareholders' meeting had approved the sale of Clee Hill but the deal could not be completed in time to save NSM. The company, which unsuccessfully bid for the South

Wales part of British Coal two vears ago, was forced to declare losses of £75 million in problems in the US. John Jermine, NSM's chairman, blamed the problems on unforeseen circumstances - two 'once-in-100-years" storms happening in successive years. Mr Jermine said he believed that the group's businesses in South Wales would be a strong operation that should year. The business has more than 80 million tonnes of licensed coal reserves at the Pentreclwydau mine.

RJB's shares have been hit by the uncertainty at NSM. which recently obtained permission to buy back 5 per cent of its shares. Barclays de Zoete Wedd. RJB's brokers, downgraded its profits forecast last month. It warned that the price of coal being sold by RIB might be hit by cheap imports

Blunders blight Halifax payout Sears and now chairman of Hammerson.

BY CAROLINE MERRELL

THOUSANDS of members of the Halifax are being excluded from the flotation bonus because of massive computer blunders. Among those most affected are former Leeds Permanent Building Society savers and borrowers.

At least 100,000 former Leeds savers were given wrong information about the money in their accounts when the society was taken over by the Halifax in 1994. Some savers were told they had enough money in their accounts to qualify for the shares when in fact they did not, while others were told they did not qualify. when they did.

Leeds savers may have closed their accounts or depleted them even further. thus excluding themselves entirely from the payout. Another group of Leeds savers who may find their shares could be in jeopardy are those who were forced to move savings out of Leeds accounts into comparable Halifax accounts after the takeover, assured by the Halifax that they would continue to qualify for the bonus. But the computer has disqualified members if there is any difference in the details on the two accounts.

Among those affected are Geoffrey Maitland Smith, former chairman of Labour pressed to delay power market if elected

By Christine Buckley, industrial correspondent

LABOUR is facing growing pressure to postpone the ambitious scheme to enable household consumers to shop around for electricity.

As the election approaches. fears are growing that the programme is about to fall into chaos. It is thought that Labour has been urged, if it wins the election, to slow the introduction of competition. The present aim is that more than 20 million homes should be able to buy electricity competitively by 1998.

Calls for a wholesale revision of the project are now coming from independent energy experts, along with a massive lobby from the companies that must implement the mechanics of the system. Fresh fears have been fuelled by increased evidence that the complicated computer networks and other necessary operations are foundering. At Yorkshire Electricity, which has given public warnings of the social costs of the world's first attempt to deliver competition to the household market, two key staff suddenly left the company recently after playing important roles in the 1998 project. Last year, Hyder, the Welsh multi-utility, pulled out of a new IBM scheme to deliver competition run in conjunction with Sweb, the South Western electricity company. Sweb is reviewing its position but said that the system will not be running by 1998. Dieter Helm, the Oxford energy adviser, said a Labour government should launch a revaluation of the project "the day after the election". Both the programmes to bring in electricity and gas competition had been poorly managed and needed effective trials, and the 1998 programme cannot be delivered as it is now envis-

John Battle, the Shadow Energy spokesman, rejected industry speculation that Labour was considering plans to delay competition if it wins the election. But he gave warning that the programme must work efficiently. "The worst of all worlds would be for people not to get their bills and then, surprise. surprise, a Tory opposition would turn round and blame us," he said. The gas trials in the South West, where 500,000 customers can buy gas competitively, have been plagued by billing problems. Similarly, British Gas has blamed preparation for competition for huge er-rors in its customer billing.

Diamond jobs in London not threatened By Jon Ashworth

A WIDE-RANGING investigation into the South African diamond industry will not affect jobs in London, it was claimed yesterday by the Cen-tral Selling Organisation. The CSO, which markets most of the world's production of rough (uncut) gems, is associated with De Beers, the South African diamond producer. The CSO relies on the republic for only about 20 per cent of its business.

It had been suggested that the CSO's entire 1.000-strong London workforce was under threat. The CSO yesterday dismissed the reports as "non-sense", and said it would not be affected by a South African government commission of inquiry into the diamond industry. The CSO is controlled by Centenary, the Swiss-based offshore arm of De Beers.

The other main distinction involves money. Reynolds is intent on turning a profit, whatev-er the risks of investing in far-flung regions. CDC provides loans and start-up capital in areas where the closest bank is often hundreds of miles away. Fraud, theft and mismanagement are some of the dangers. But at least budding entrepreneurs are given a fighting chance.

Reynolds has slipped comfortably into his new role since taking early retirement from Shell five years ago. High Commissioners come cap-in-hand to his offices near the Tate Gallery in central London. His in-tray is filled with exotic proposals - fish farms in Zimbabwe; citrus plantations in Costa Rica. Reynolds and his emissaries sift through perhaps 1,000 s a year. Onli

In November, he surfaced in Lusaka, Zambia, at about the same time as British Airways workers were being pelted with rocks by rioting students. Meetings with ministers led to the Zambian Copper Belt, which is currently being privatised. Nearly 40 companies are in the market for stateowned mining and power assets. a watchful eye over its charges. One - as yet untested - venture is taking shape in Soweto, the sprawling township on the outskirts of Johannesburg. Curiously, for a city with up to eight million inhabitants, Soweto does not have one formal shopping centre. Much of the trade is done by street hawkers. Residents

Zambia are whole townships, a bit like the old coalmines in the UK. One would go and meet the management, meet the people, talk to them about the issues."

A different type of Zambian produce is destined for Tesco, and other UK supermarket chains. CDC's extensive agricul-tural interests produce baby corn, beans, mange-tout, and fresh roses — flown out daily from Lusaka.

He travels by scheduled flight and Land Rover, chartering aircraft when the location is remote. Zambia led to Zimbabwe, where investors are seeking to breed tilapia la freshwater fish on Lake Kariba. To the north, workers are rehabilitating tea plantations in Uganda, Kenya and Tanzania, pruning wild tea bushes that untended can grow to 20ft or more. To the east, CDC is looking at container facilities for Maputo in Mozambique.

CDC has grown into a sprawling enterprise since the original Colonial Development Corporation was founded in 1948. Chaired by Lord Cairns, the chairman of BAT Industries, CDC is the UK's overseas development finance insti-tution, holding more than 400 investments in 56 countries, and providing jobs for about 40,000 people. A predicted £300 million will be ploughed into projects in 1997 alone.

There are sugar mills, citrus groves - even power stations. CDC provides all the electricity on St Lucia in the Caribbean, and is about to take on the same role in Dominica. It recently made its first foray into Vietnam, financing the nation's first large-scale sugar refinery.

Reynolds has a clear sense of the CDC's priorities. We are there to assist the economic development of the poorer

Roy Reynolds, CDC chief executive, has a clear sense of priorities. "We are there to assist the economic development of poorer countries in the world."

Working with Norwich Properties, a South African life assurance group, CDC is backing three new shopping centre complexes, which are due to open in May. They will include grocery stores, banking facilities and fast-food outlets. Well intended, no doubt - but will they still be standing by Christmas? In the past less ambitious schemes have fallen prey to

Reynolds is on the road ten to 12 weeks a year, assessing proposals and chivvying up existing projects. He recently returned from India, where he met politicians and business leaders. "India is looking for further investment. While they need it, they're always a bit concerned about how it should come in. CDC is perhaps the right sort of vehicle."

Reynolds is not alone in finding an attractive bolthole in CDC. Bob Clark, head of CDC industries, formerly ran !Cl Explosives. Nick Selbie, in charge of CDC investments, was formerly with Kleinwort Benson and Barclays de Zoete Wedd (BZV). Robert Binyon, managing director of CDC financial markets, held senior posts at Deutsche Morgan Grenfell and Tokai Bank. A club for agoing executives seeking a second career? Or a capital for the world's poorer nations? Out in the wilds of Africa it would not be hard to guess at the answer.

Managers put through their paces at Swinton Castle

Executives attending courses at Lindley Training Centre, a management training outfit within the castellated walls of Swinton Castle, west Yorkshire, should not be surprised at this time of year to see people carrying braces of pheasant as they return from the day's shoot. Contrary to some rumours, they are not part of a case study, but are there as guests of the Earl of Swinton, who has retained the right to use rooms in the castle that once belonged to his ancestors.

Built to display the political, royal and artistic influence of his 17th-century forebears, Swinton Castle today hosts management training courses for every level, from company directors to graduate trainees at GEC or ICI being put through their paces.

The building, now owned by the Lindley Educational Lindley Educational Trust offers more than courses, Joanna Pitman finds was transformed into a cas-tle in the 1820s. It is a fine asset, but it is as much a liability on the balance sheet, because of the high costs of maintenance and insurance. Swinton Castle has had a colourful 300-year history. It embodies the story of the evolution of a family and clearly shows the differing tastes of each successive owner. The first house on the site was built by Sir Abstropus Danby, a descendant of the Scrope family, a distinguished line of soldiers who had been given land in the 14th century for supporting Edward II in his inva-

down the female line into the Danby family, a befuddled parson who should have christened the eldest son Apscrope (son of Scrope) in muddled his diction and christened him Abstropus instead. Sir Abstropus had decided to build a house on his inherited lands. It was a square construction of three floors topped by a cupola. By 1697 the house was completed and Sir Abstropus celebrated by spending the exorbitant sum of £4 l6s on double leaf gold for the golden ball on the cupola. Sir Abstropus died in 1727 and his son, also named Abstropus, had the parlour room remodelled and panelled in white. His son, William, added a range of spent 30 years on changes.

A new wing was added, a "great pond" dug in the grounds and 30,000 larch and Scots pine planted to create a vision worthy of the Grand Tourist's sophisticated eye. A museum was built for Danby's archaeological and botanical specimens and the museum's architect, who had a passion for castellation, managed to persuade him to turn Swinton into a castle. A massive round tower with porte-cochère was built and the whole construction was topped with turrets and battlements to complete the illusion of a castle.

On Danby's death in 1833, Swinton Castle passed to his second wife and on to her cousin who sold it in 1882 to Samuel Cunliffe-Lister, a 68year-old inventor and the fourth son of an old landed family. He extended the estate and added new decorative ornament.

Three generations later, the Curliffe-Listers sold Swinton Castle and 17 acres to the Lindley Educational Trust Two thousand managers now enjoy its hospitality every year.

What's changed the climate in Brazil?

Since introducing a new economic plan two years ago. Brazil has enjoyed great success. Inflation has plummeted from 2.700% to 15% while per capita income has risen by over 50%.

This new-found affluence has unleashed a massive demand for electrical appliances. With investments in Brazil's household goods manufacturers, Martin Currie is perfectly placed to make the most of this promising investment opportunity.

Sainsbury profits alert starts retail sector slide

SHARE prices and govern-ment securities fell sharply in response to programme selling overnight on Wall Street. London also suffered from a surprise profits warning by J Sainsbury, Britain's second biggest food retailer.

As the Dow Jones industrial average continued to lose ground in early trading yesterday, the FT-SE 100 index finished just above its low for the day. It was left nursing a fall of 52.7 from Thursday's closing high to finish at 4,218.8, reducing the rise on the week to just 11.1. A total of 795 million shares changed drop-off in foreign exchange dealings, accounting for half its revenues, had begun to affect profits. The group is now estimated to be sitting on almost £1 billion in cash after abandoning plans to hand back £631 million in September.

Ofex-quoted Chartfield, which owns the Waverly Group of unit trusts, rose 5p to 55p on bid hopes. Gabriel Trust owns 22.6 per cent and is tipped to bid for the rest. But with the directors holding 38 per cent, Jupiter Tyndali 5 per cent and Amic 7.5 per cent, any bid will have to be agreed - at a substantial premium.

"hold" to a "buy". Manchester United firmed 312p to 732p. Racal Electronics finally got moving by putting in a late run to finish 19'2p better at 26812p on turnover of 3.29 million shares. This latest bout of speculative buying was prompted by talk that it is close to making a major disposal.

Reuters, the news agency and financial information specialist, dropped 1712p to 68212p on suggestions that the ker, has cut its 1997 profit estimate for the paper and packaging group by £8 million to £100 million. It has also reduced its forecast for 1998 by £5 million to £115 million.

Sun Life failed to respond to new business figures showing a rise of 13 per cent to £145 million. The price finished 512p lower at 28412p with Credit Lyonnais Laing, the broker, telling clients that the shares are at least 100p too expensive. It says the price has Starved of power, they have secret plans to build mouseholes but lack resources. The fat cats look lazy, sleek and ready to be taxed.

But like most cats, the utility bosses are not asleep, just napping. They too have plans most are lobbying hard to escape the utility tax. Will all cats be taxed, or just fat ones?

British Gas is no longer fat and what about BT? The fat phone company has been nice to the mice. But the Labour party is keeping mum. While the utilities spit and snarl some Americans are even reaching for their iawyers - they do their cause no good. The essence of the utility tax is politics, not economics. A future labour Government will need money but no one has a clue how much could be raised, and small sums - a few billion — are hardly worth bothering about.

Unlike the 1980s tax on banks, Labour's lovy gained from high interest rates or oil prices. A simple method would be to establish a benchmark return on capital. A tax could be constructed to cream off a percentage of any surplus return.

Easily done, but not necessarily sensible; such a tax on profit would punish efficiency and would ill suit a new consumer-conscious Labour Party. There is the problem of defining profits and the inevitable risk of spurring accountants into tax avoidance.

But all this may be irrelevant and the Labour Party's best move is to sit still and watch the cats prowl. Few utility directors fully understand the depths of public contempt for them. The more they oppose the tax, the more it will be popular. A court case pitting fat cats against the tax would be a godsend for Labour. Even now the mice may be planning to good the cats into a rage.

THE stock market gave a resounding and fully deserved raspberry to the J Sainsbury dream team yes-terday. After all, if the coach claims to have assembled a top notch management with a winning strategy, as David Sainsbury did, the fans cannot fail to be disappointed if their team is knocked out in the first round, however

Sainsbury packed its supermarket with staff expecting a Christmas rush in early De--cember: an extraordinary decision when the record suggests shoppers buy food as late as possible. Hence the decision by Asda, Saleway and Tesco to open some stores all night in the run-up to the holiday.

Sure enough, Samsbury felt no pressure to follow suit. Christmas comes but once a year but every year it arrives on. December 25. Sainsbury mutters that it got its timing wrong. Societies in turmoil over rate pledges

Marianne Curphey reports on a court case that has important implications for society savers

uilding society bosses are this weekend poring over a landmark legal ruling which could open the floodgates for tens of thousands of investors

They are urgently reap-praising marketing literature to check whether bold claims about investment returns can be justified.

The savings industry has been rocked to its core after The Times reported how Robert Anthony, 49, a Suffolk schoolteacher, successfully sued the Norwich and Peterborough Building Society in the small claims court after it cut the rate on his tax-exempt special savings account. If the 19,144 other savers with the same Tessa did likewise, it could cost Norwich and Peterborough E5.5 million.

The case lays all other banks and building societies whose investment performance falls short of their initial claims open to similar action.

The Building Societies Association yesterday began circulating copies of the Norwich County Court judgment to all its members. Mr Anthony said opened his account after finding Norwich and Peterhigh street rates. When he

£3,000 in January 1992, it was paying 12 per cent and the society's marketing literature claimed it would pay "a very competitive rate of interest". However, he alleged the rate soon fell and over four years, Norwich and Peterborough had failed to fulfil this claim by maintaining an interest rate near the bottom of recognised league tables.

District Judge Jim Horrocks agreed and awarded him £285 - a sum equal to the extra interest he would have earned had his money been in an ac-and questioned the rates with his local branch. They replied by saying that "at any one time, a particular type of account may be more or less competitive than another in comparison with other financial institutions".

Judge Horrocks said: "The plaintiff's case is that the defendants' interest rates, while starting off well, fell after about 18 months and thereafter far borough offered one of the best from being very competitive were then about the worst of all its competitors ... the defendants say the words very competitive' were a mere 'puff and/or have no contractual relevance and/or other legal effect." He described how solicitors for the Norwich and Peterborough argued that Mr Anthony had accepted and signed the terms and conditions of the Tessa, which made no mention of the words in the brochure. But the judge said he had reached the conclusion that "very competitive" meant "very competitive with our competitors" and that in turn meant "as good as if not better than those of its competitors

He added that as Mr Anthony began to take an interest in his returns and raised the issue with the society, "so the wording of the brochure was watered down by the defendants from 'very competitive' to 'competitive' and finally to 'attractive' rates of interest. Why would they have done this if they were confident the words were simply a puff?"

Mr Anthony said: "I am delighted. I paid £50 to take on a multimillion pound company in court and won. Other investors in a similar position should write and ask for the

About 1.5 million taxpayers should have been sent "statements of account" requesting payment of half their 1996-97 tax liability by the end of this month. However, according to accountants many people have not received the demands for tax, and even if they have, the demands are wrong.

Those who have not received the demands will still have to pay the tax. Martin Donn, personal tax partner at Blick Rothenberg, warns all taxpayers to look carefully at their statements of account, as a proportion have been incorrectly calculated.

The amount to be paid is assessed on the previous year's tax liability. The tax is due in two payments - one at the end of this month, and one in July. Maurice Fitzpatrick, of Chantrey Vellacott, the accountants. said: "I would urge anyone who thinks they could be due to pay a bill to contact their tax office as soon

Mr Fizpatrick points out that the statements of account may also not be accurate because some accountants have still to finalise the 1995-96 accounts. However, he said: You still have to pay. You are not absolved from any tax liability."

Those who do receive a statement of account can choose not to pay the entire amount, if they believe their tax liability will be less than in previous years. However, they risk paying interest if this proves not to

Abbey aims to attract float bonuses

The Abbey National is stepping up the battle for the estimated £20 billion that will be released into the economy this year after building society and life insurance company floats. The bank has raised savings rates by up to 0.75 per cent to try to attract millions of those looking forward to average payouts of £1,100 this year as the Halifax, Alliance & Leicester, Woolwich, Bristol & West, Northern Rock and Norwich Union convert.

Abbey suffered a big out-flow of savings after it took over the National & Provincial last year. About £600 million of cash was moved out of the bank in the weeks immediately following the takeover as former members of National & Provincial placed their savings with building societies offering higher rates of interest. By raising rates the Abbey is hoping to attract back some of this money. It declined to say how much money had been switched, but said that 100,000 of the 640,000 who had opted for shares rather than cash had sold their holdings. The improved rates will help many of Abbey's remaining 12 million savers.

Ambrose McGinn, director of retail savings, said: "This move will both reward our existing investors and attract new investors currently with other banks and building societies.

The biggest increases are for savers with the most to invest who are willing to keep the money with the society for a long time. For instance, tax-

The rates on the more popular instant access account and 90-day account have been increased only 0.1 per cent for those with big savings. For example, the rate on the instant saver account has risen from 3.15 per cent to 3.25 per cent for those with more than £10,000 to invest. The other societies say that they have no immediate plans to follow suit. They note that they raised their rates this month in response to the increase in base rates at the end of last year.

Football's Italian job

t comes to something when Juvent-us, perhaps the most famous football club in the world, wants to take a listing on the London stock market because the Italian authorities are less than keen. The problem is that Juve, which is controlled by the Agnelli family of Fiat fame, does not have the required three-year record of profits to be allowed to join the Milan exchange. And despite having a turnover of 115 billion lire (£44 million), last season it managed to lose 14 billion lire. The economics of Juve rather mirror those of our largest football clubs, such as Manchester United, Arsenal and Newcastle United. TV and sponsorship income is now dwarfing the amount the club gets from the supporters who come through the turnstiles. However, only for a handful of clubs is the entire income enough to cover the costs of buying the sort of players who appear on the pitch and to pay their spiralling wages. If Premiership clubs are going to spend £15 million for Alan Shearer and offer Guiseppe Signori a reputed £2 milliona-year salary, then the pot of gold that is supposed to come with pay-per-view TV is going to have to be pretty damn exciting to balance the books.

Last week's collapse of Millwall is a salutory lesson. The club was floated in 1989 when it was in the top flight. It was relegated, but built an all-seater stadium which could accommodate the crowds it would get when it went back up. To help to pay for this, there would be pop concerts, boxing fights and other events. But Clasis did not want to play in New Cross. And Millwall was relegated again, ending up with 44 players (12 more than Arsenal). El0 million debts and losses of £3 million a year. David Buchler, who having been involved with Tottenham Hotspur and Barnet knows a thing or two about troubled clubs, is currently trying to sort out the mess and refloat the Lions of southeast London.

Two of the recently floated clubs -Southampton and Sunderland - have real prospects of being relegated from the Premiership this season, as does Coventry City, which is eyeing a float. While the combination of good property assets and decent management should keep these from the fate of Millwall, investors have to be aware of the danger.

But at least in floated clubs, there is the reassurance of a prospectus and a relatively liquid market. The massive gains in recent weeks have been in the shares traded on Ofex and on a matched-bargain basis - such as Arsenal, Everton, Liverpool and Manchester City. Take Aston Villa. In the

there was only one class of share. At that point, shares were £450 each, valuing the club at £44.5 million. Every month Albert E Sharp, the broker, auctions a block of shares in Villa. In January the entire block was bought by one investor for £1,200 a share. Since then an offer of £1,650 has been made for these shares, which would value the club at a staggering £149 million. Expect an even higher price for the February auction.

This boom has been fuelled by unrealistic expectations of a rosy future and a shortage of stock. But calling the peak of the market is dangerous. Joseph Lewis, the catering and currency billionaire whose wealth has taken him from the East End to the Bahamas, last week took a £40 million bet on Rangers. His investment is being used to fund a hotel at Ibrox, which is not exactly in the nicest part of Glasgow, and values the club at £160 million.

ewis's cohorts believe Rangers can be floated in two to three years with As value of twice that and are hunting for other clubs in which to invest. There is talk that he may be involved in proposals from Michael Tabor, the racehorse owner, to invest £30 million in West Ham United and he is known to have made approaches to Arsenal. The real test will come with the Newcastle United float. Timed for April. it will easily value the club at £200 million. This will be five times turnover and about 20 times operating profits before buying overpriced footballers.

TESSA RATES UP TO

Sara McConnell on a disputed case of freehold purchase

When leaseholders' rights to buy are flouted by a landlord

leasehold flats in Littlehampton are fighting to buy back the freehold of their block from their landlord after discovering that he bought it for less than a quarter of the price quoted to the leaseholders. This was a clear breach of the rules governing leasehold-ers' rights of first refusal when their freehold is up for sale. But Rubypoint, the company which bought the freehold, is refusing to sell at the same price for which it bought, saying the leaseholders had failed to exercise their right to do this within the set times laid down in law.

Stella Evans and her fellow flat-owners received a notice from Rubypoint in January 1992, telling them that the company was planning to buy the freehold of the Victorian conversion block for £4,500 and asking if they wanted to buy the freehold at this price.

The leaseholders rejected the offer, because they could not afford to pay nearly £650 each.

They discovered subsequently that Rubypoint had bought the freehold for just £1,050 from the previous free-holder. Miss Evans said: "If we had been told the true price we would certainly have exercised our right to buy."

Robert Enticott of the solicitors George Ide, Philips, for the leaseholders, said: "It is our contention that the majority of leaseholders would have responded if given the true price and that they did not exercise their rights because they were given false information.

Nicholas Hyam and Gary Mills, the directors of Rubypoint in 1992, were jailed at Croydon Crown Court last summer for a total of nearly five years on charges of deception and theft from leaseholders, unrelated to the disputed price of the freehold of one of their properties. This week Mr Hyam lost his appeal in the High Court.

The current director of Rubypoint is listed at Companies House as Tony Maio. Mr Maio, who also owns a garage, has so far refused to take responsibility for what the leaseholders' solicitors allege is deliberate fraudulent misreuresentation to out the leaseholders off buying their freehold.

He declined to comment this week, saying: "It is nothing to do with me. I wasn't a director at the time. You need to talk to Mr Hyam. And it's none of your business."

Mr Enticott rejects the argument of Mr Maio's solicitor that the leaseholders have forfeited their rights because they did not exercise them soon enough. Mr Enticott told Mr Maio two months ago in a letter: "It would appear that a false statement of fact was made in the original notice, that it was made without belief in its truth, that it was intended that our clients would act to their detriment upon the statement, that they did so act and that consequently they have suffered damage.

Mr Enticott says he has received no explanation from Rubypoint for the purchase at a price lower than that quoted to the leaseholders. Mr Maio says he is still willing to sellthe freehold but at its current price, which would almost certainly be much higher than Rubypoint bought it for. The leaseholders are now deciding whether to sue Rubypoint for

The Law and Leaseholders' Rights

Since 1987, leaseholders have had the right of first refusal if the freehold of their block is up for sale. But this rule was flouted widely by landlords because there were no sanctions for ignoring it. Freeholds changed hands frequently at auction without leaseholders' knowledge and many flatowners have found themselves on the receiving end of large

service charge bills and pro-posals for major works from their new landlords. New laws came into force last October as part of the 1996

Housing Act which make it a criminal offence for landlords not to offer tenants the right of first refusal. Under the Act: ■ Landlords wanting to sell must serve a notice on leaseholders offering them first chance to buy. If you receive a notice from the seller, you have up to two months for a majority of leaseholders in the block to respond.

Some landlords claim they potential buyer to serve a notice on leaseholders, as Rubypoint did. But the Court of Appeal ruled 18 months ago that this was not an alternative and did not remove the seller's responsibility to offer leaseholders the freehold. If leaseholders receive a notice from a person or company proposing to buy the freehold of your block, a majority must respond within 28 days that you want to be served with notices by the seller.

If a landlord sells behind leaseholders' backs, leaseholders now have up to four can get away with allowing the months, not two, from when they find out they have a new landlord to serve a notice on him. He must reveal how much he paid for the freehold and explain to leaseholders they have the right to buy. Leaseholders then have six months, not three, to buy. Previously, landlords were not obliged to reveal what they had paid for freeholds.

> Leaseholders have the right to buy at the price at which it was sold to the new landlord. Freeholds must not change hands at a lower price than that leastholders were offered until a year has passed.

THE self-assessment debade may be coming to pass sooner than we predicted.

On January 31, 15 million people will have to pay a bill for half their 1996-97 tax liability (see page 35). Thousands have yet to receive these first self-assessment demands. But they will still be obliged to pay interest on the unpaid tax even though they have no idea of what they owe. This means that they will be paying a penalty of 8.5 per cent for the taxman's inefficiency. The Revenue refused to say whether these penalties will be waived. What a sorry way to begin the greatest reform to income tax since its invention.

War widows gain small victory on pensions rights

War Pensions at the Department of Social Security (DSS).

After a long-running cam-paign by the War Widows Association, Lord Mackay decided to simplify the rules so that the DSS pension would be restored to all war widows who had ceased living with their partners. "He hopes the e will come into effect by April this year," said a DSS spokesman.

eradicate the risky human touch

Tund managers such as Nicola Horlick, the mil-lion-pound superwoman suspended by Deutsche Morgan Grenfell (DMG) this month, could become an increasingly rare breed in the brave new world of investment. Investment companies are increasingly impatient with their highly paid staff either getting the market wrong and losing them money, or defect-ing to rivals and leaving them in the lurch. Instead, they are turning to techniques such as index tracking and quantitative management, which aim to eradicate the risk of using temperamental human beings. The argument in favour of index tracking is almost irresistible. Over the long term, the direction of the stock markets, as measured by indices such as the FT-SE 100 and FT-SE All-Share, is remorselessly upwards. However, most active fund managers fail to do better than the indices. Why not, the argument goes, buy every share in the index and hang on with investors as it has combined above-average performance with lower charges. According to Virgin Direct. only seven out of 74 UK Peps have beaten the All-Share in the past five years, and most of these were tracker funds.

ny's managing director, believes the ructions at DMG underline the beauty of a tracker's simplicity: "Is Nicola Horlick worth £1 million? If she is so important and she can just march out of the door, doesn't it show that it is not good enough to find the right company and choose the right fund, which is complicated enough. You have to follow the individual career of the fund manager as well." The simplicity also appeals to the newcomers to the financial services industry, such as Virgin. Another example is Guardian Direct, the insurer, which this week launched its first investment product, the Top 100 tracker Pep. Investors can put in lump sums of between £1,000 and £6,000 or save £30 to £500 per month in a fund investing in all the wellestablished blue chips of the

FT-SE 100 and get the tax benefits of the Pep. It rubs shoulders with FT-SE 100 trackers from companies such as Barclays and Direct Line. But Steve Abbot, marketing director at Legal & General, says if you are serious about tracking you should use funds that follow the FT-SE All-Share. He says: "The whole rationale of tracking is to take away the subjective judgment and say 'I want to buy the whole market. If you select the top 100 companies you are effectively making a judgment that large companies are going to do better than smaller companies which might not be the case." Strangely, tracker funds never quite live up to their name. As the table shows, not one of the All-Share trackers actually have a "tracking error" (0.25 per cent in Legal & General's case), which is then compounded by the effect of charges. For instance, in the past 12 months £1,000 in the Virgin UK tracker would have become a I per cent annual management fee, twice that of L&G. Virgia also charges a 0.5 per cent fee if you leave the fund in the first five years. Iron-ically, one of the highest chargers is Morgan Grenfell, presumably relying on its reputation as an active fund manager to 0.75 per cent annual fee. Trackers also differ in parisons because the convertheir approach. Virgin's higher annual fee could be because it has opted for full replication of the index, buying all 920 stocks. This is expensive because it entails many small deals in illiquid stocks at the bottom of the index. L&G buys only half of the stocks. Trackers work best in mature markets such as the UK, US and Europe. This gives active managers more of a chance in less-developed markets such as Latin America and the Far East, but how long will this last? tools such as cashflow to price and dividend yields. But it also looks at other "signals", such as a director buying shares in his own company.

James Woodlock, BGI's head of quants, says the company has no place for "star" stock pickers. It just needs consultants to keep the black boxes matched the performance of the FT-SE All-Share, pound for running and dealers to carry out the deals: "A black box doesn't hire a PR consultant." pound over one, three and five years. entire universe of unit trusts, more than 1,600 in all.

Naturally enough, most companies offering fund of funds prefer to invest in their own in-house range. They can be very successful. The Britannia Managed Portfolio, for instance, has more than dovbled a £1,000 investment to £2,103 over the past five years by investing in ten of its unit trusts. Sun Alliance has also flown its flag well with its Portfolio fund of funds adding

E840 to £1,000 over five years. Not all of them are good value, however. The Sun Alliance Campbell Harrison Crucible unit trust would have lost £150 had you put in £1,000 last January. The fund is one of six broker trusts that Sun Alliance operates, in which fund selection and marketing is outsourced to an independent financial adviser, in this case Campbell Harrison of Shef field. Sun Alliance says it is closing the fund and will not be supporting any more brothose that can select from the ker-managed trusts in future.

companies specialising in fund funds. As such it is able to choose from more than 1,600 unit trusts across all the management groups. However, it does face the problem of double charging. Investors pay a 5 per cent initial fee and a 1 per cent annual management fee to get into the Portfolio fund, and then pay for the charges of the underlying funds. Mr Miller concedes that this is a problem but says the company strikes bargains when it buys into funds in bulk.

The Portfolio Fund of Funds narrowly beats the Britannia fund over five years, coming top of the sector with a return of £2,110 on a £1,000 lump sum. Next month it launches a European fund of funds.

Portfolio picks its funds using information from Fund Research, a unit trust analysis company. By talking to City fund managers it then deter-mines how much they are investing in different countries. It then chooses 15 to 20 funds that match the asset allocation consensus.

Premier Fund Managers of Guildford takes a more systematic approach in its Selector fund of funds, which it runs in association with Scottish Widows. It follows the asset allocation of the average pension fund and picks funds by analysing their performance in relation to their volatility. A highly volatile fund will rise and fail erratically, whereas one with low volatility will plot a smooth course on a chart.

According to Jonathan Fry, a director at Premier, volatility is not necessarily bad. Although a more volatile fund is a riskier investment, the risk may be justified if rewarded by excellent performance.

To begin his selection he draws a line on a chart starting at zero growth and low volatility and finishing at high volatility and high growth (see charts). Broadly speaking, he buys funds that lie above the line (triangles). Those that fall below he sells or puts under review (circles). The line rises sharply at first but levels off as returns diminish as volatility increases.

In looking at the UK growth chart it is apparent that the Equitable Special Situations is blowing a particularly large raspberry at the moment. It combines a poor three-month performance with volatile behaviour. Not much better are Henderson UK Enterprise and Legal & General Equity.

y contrast. Mercury Recovery has justified its relatively high volatility with the sector's best performance. However, the best deals are Sanwa UK Growth and Jupiter UK Growth. Although their growth has been modest compared with Mercury, as the chart demonstrates, it has been more reliable. Similarly, Henderson European Small Companies is achieving good returns more consistently than the average European unit trust. Mr Fry says this is a useful tool for investors but urges caution. A fund can short term even if its manager gets a bet right, which will boost long-term performance. You don't want to get carried away with measuring risk." he says. "But people should be aware that performance is not everything. Ideally, what they want is good, consistent performers as far up the top left corner of the charts

How you can find your way around the stock market

S ume eight million people will receive a free handout of shares from the Halifax Building Society this summer. Many of them, those with mortgages with the Halifax, will have been more used to their money flowing the other way. Four other huge financial institutions, the Alliance & Leicester. Woolwich and Northern Rock building societies and the insurance group Norwich Union, will also floar on the stock market by the same method - a direct distribution of free shares to lenders and borrowers - this

So a total of 17 million new private shareholders will spring into existence this year. That is not to say that 17 million people will suddenly become investors for the first time; there is enormous overlap in the memberships of the four. Some may have a mortgage, say with the Woolwich, a few hundred pounds or more in accounts at the Halifax and Alliance & Leicester and perhaps an endowment policy with Norwich Union. Such lucky folk will benefit four times over. Some may already be familiar with share ownership, through the wave of popular privatisation stocks of the 1980s, kicked off by British Telecom. This tripled the number of private shareholders, currently standing at 9.5 million and a little below its 11 million

Despite this, the importance of private investors has been shrinking. In the three decades from the mid-1960s the proportion of the market held directly by individuals shrank from 54 per cent to around 20 per cent. This was not necessarily the result of private individuals selling out; put simply, the City institutions took a bigger chunk of the shares coming to the market, in the form of shares issued by existing quoted companies and of new businesses seeking a stock market listing. It is impossible to say how many new investors, those without privatisation stocks or whatever, will be created by those four market debuts this year, and the ones that will follow. But that number must run into millions. These are people who have never held a dividend cheque in their hands, who have never needed to find out what their shares are worth. They may never, poor benighted souls, have had the pleasure of reading the financial pages. This five-part series is mainly for them; more sophisticated investors might learn something, too. After 20 years in business journalism, I had thought I was well up with all of the information that will follow. Surprising how little you know, when you start to put it into words. We start with the calendar of a financial year and the main reason for holding shares -

There must come a stage, clearly, after which new purchasers of the shares are not entitled to the payment al-ready announced. Losing out on bonus payouts eties came under fire again this week as more members were told that they were to be excluded from bonus payments averaging £1,200. One Halifax member more than £4,000 because of wrong advice from his branch.

Engaged and unhelpful helplines have caused confusion and anger, particularly among those trying to establish their right to the shares of relatives who have died. In at least one case, branch staff have given misleading information although they are not supposed to talk about payouts. The rules on successors' rights to free shares are some of the most complex in the daunting transfer documents. Government intervention nearly two years ago forced societies to relent on their hardline stance of refusing to pay bonuses to relatives of dead members where the member had been the first named on a joint account and the second named had not been a member in his or her own right.

After an outcry from widows excluded from Cheltenham & Gloucester payouts after the death of their hus-through Parliament by Douglas French, MP for Gloucester.

The Building Societies (Joint Account Holders) Act 1995 preserves the right of secondaccounts to qualify for bonuses member would have qualified. Previously societies had claimed only first-named account holders were members and their rights died with them.

But it is still up to societies to set qualifying dates. These exclude many who would otherwise have qualified but also appear to be a source of confusion to the societies.

Jeff Jeffery, a Halifax member, was concerned that he had not received anything from the society to say that he was entitled to receive his late mother's shares although the society had confirmed that he qualified for a variable bonus in his own right.

His mother died on June 9. 1995, leaving Mr Jeffery as her sole beneficiary. Probate on his mother's estate was resolved by October of that year. The balance on the account would have entitled Mr Jeffery to more than £4,000 of shares.

Poor communication will keep Jeff Jeffery and his wife Ann from a Halifax handout

According to the Halifax's transfer document, shares would go to a deceased member's successor as long as the society was told of a death after November 25, 1994, and hefore the date of the flotation in July 1997. But Mr Jeffery received no reply to his letter to the conversion information office asking why he had had no confirmation of his right to the shares. His branch said the qualifying date was not Nov-ember 25, 1994, but December 12, 1995. This was the date of a. press announcement on the rules on successors' rights.

Only after The Times intervened did the Halifax admit that Mr Jeffery did not qualify account because he had transferred the money from his mother's account into his own. : He should have been told to set up a new account, naming although it had been advised by head office to inform members that this was the safest way of

Flemings drops charges to land 'knockout blow'

The pensions price war erupted again this week as the City took on Virgin and other telephone pension providers. Flemings announced that it was abolishing the £100 set-up charge and the £50 annual maintenance charge on its investment trust Pension Accounts and claimed it was dealing a knockout blow to overpriced

The abolition of the two set charges makes Flemings cheaper than any traditional life company or direct pension provider, according to the company's calculations. Personal pensions have been heavily criticised, most recently by the Consumers' Association, for their high charges and poor performance.
Public confidence in personal pensions has been rocked by the mis-selling scandal, which remains unresolved more than three years after the evidence was unveiled by regulators. Flemings freely admits that pensions price war

it is not going to make heavy inroads on the mass market, where most of the worst-value pensions are sold. Since launching its investment trust-linked personal pensions in October 1995, it has signed up 1,500 clients. These clients have come either in response to direct mailshots or through independent financial advisers. But the company is keen to promote pensions as a "natural market" for investment trusts. Daniel Godfrey, the company's marketing director for investment trusts, said: They are a good match. They are long-term, investor interest will keep discounts narrow. and they have low charges."

The Flemings pension now carries a maintenance charge of 0.5 per cent, which falls to 0.25 per cent once the fund reaches £10,000. The charge is capped at £175 for funds of more than £70,000. On top of this there is an annual management charge of 0.65 per cent on the underlying trusts.

Using statistics from Money insurance companies" pensions illustrations, Flemings calculates that its charges would reduce a pension fund of £213,062 by 11.8 per cent over 25 years. Charges would reduce the same fund at Virgin by 17.4 per cent and by 16.9 per cent at Eagle Star Direct.

The best traditional life company, Equitable Life, would deduct 12.6 per cent in charges. United Friendly, the worst, would deduct a whacking 29 per cent. The figures all assume that the fund will grow at 9 per cent a year.

INVESTMENT TRUST FROM M&G

M&G will be launching a new Investment Trust in February which will be available for investment in the M&G PEP.

This new fund will invest in a portfolio of shares and aims to provide a high and growing income as well as good capital growth over time.

PEP investors will have a choice of investing, either to achieve a yield above 5%* or, for those investors willing to take higher risk, to achieve a yield of over 6%*.

There will be no initial charge and no withdrawal fee.

This new fund will give you the opportunity to invest your tax free PEP allowance for both the current tax year and for the 1997/98 tax year - a total tax free investment of up to £12,000.

After the initial offer period there will be a spread between the buying and t is bargain time in the gilts Land bonds market, say leading fund managers. Preelection uncertainty is keeping yields at attractively high levels, but they are likely to fall once a new government has been chosen.

Stewart Cowley, head of fixed interest at Hill Samuel Asset Management, which manages £8 billion in fixed-interest securities, argues that if Labour is elected it is likely to be more pro-European than the Conservatives. Closer economic cooperation will entail keeping a lid on inflation — essential for healthy bond markets.

He says: "When countries hold Europe at arm's length, as the UK has done, core European markets, such as Germany and France, demand a premium on yields to protect them against policy uncertainties. The UK's yield spreads are 0.5 per cent higher than they need to be compared with Germany. So UK bonds

Mr Cowley believes the cost of government borrowing could be reduced by £150 million if an economic convergence policy was pursued more vigorously. And when governments borrow less, bonds become more scarce, so their prices rise and yields fall. This means that investors who bought now could not only experience attractive yields of hetween 7 per cent and 8 per cent, but also see the capital value of their bonds go up.

Paul Brain, head of bond Flight, the fund manager, says that the gilts market is currently attractive. He says: "Now is a good time to buy because nobody likes political uncertainty. We believe a new government is likely to raise interest rates quickly to take the momentum out of a strongly growing economy and thereby choke off inflation. The gilts market will rally after that." Guinness Flight expects a Labour government to be at least as determined as the Conservatives to reduce public spending and borrowing good news for existing bond holders. It might also make corporate tax changes to encourage companies to spend more on investment, rather than on fat dividends.

This might cast a shadow over the stock market and presents another reason why investors should consider rebalancing their portfolios to include more bonds.

omeowners and motorists face increases of up to 10 per cent in their insurance premiums this year after the winter freeze cost insurers hundreds of millions of pounds in claims from

The biggest bills the industry faces are for burst pipes in private homes and offices, where the cost of repairing damage often exceeds £50,000.

The Association of British Insurers spent £135,000 this winter alerting householders to the hazards of sub-zero temperatures. Insurance companies laid on hundreds of extra staff to cope with the rush of claims after the big thaw. But even careful householders can fall victim to burst pipes and water tanks if these are old or leaky.

John Burke, a travel agent from London, returned home from a holiday in Tenerife this month to find "a frozen waterfall" coming out of the first floor landing window of his home. The big freeze over Christmas and the new year had caused his upstairs pipes and water tanks to burst, and water began cascading down

His insurance company says the damage could cost £25,000 to repair and that six months of work are needed to make the house habitable.

Mr Burke opened his front door to discover ceilings had fallen down in the bedrooms, kitchen and the hallway. "I've never seen such devastation. The house is unrecognisable," he said. Furniture, family photos and carpets are ruined.

Unknown to Mr Burke, the police had broken into his home while he was on holiday after neighbours had heard a huge crash, which turned out to be the sound of the kitchen ceiling collapsing. They turned off gas, electricity and water. Had the flooding continued for a few more days, the foundations could have be-

Burst pipes have been the biggest headache for house-holders this winter. David Lennan, head of retail insurance for NatWest Insurance Services, said his claims department had seen a 35 per cent rise in calls over the past

Damage claims for house holds last year totalled £400 million and would have been higher but for the fact that the worst of the weather was in Scotland, where the population is less dense. This year the most badly hit area is the South East, which is particularly vulnerable to flooding

Mr Lennan said the average household damage claim because of winter weather was £1,500, but some were far higher. "Sustained water damage can cause tremendous problems as plasterboard ceilings deteriorate very quickly

As a small consolation to people whose homes have been damaged over the winter, loss adjusters should be able to settle claims far more swiftly, thanks to a new data service launched in December by the Meteorological Office. Called Geo Proof, it logs rainfall, and soon collapse."

Trevor May, insurance analyst with Salomon Brothers, said average household premicent this year, possibly by even more in some areas. Mr May said: "We will see rises in single figures. However, because insurers can be so precise about risk assessment by looking at bands of only 16 to 32 homes, premiums for houses in low-risk areas could even go down."

Geo Proof will enable claims handlers and loss adjusters to look at weather patterns for more than 650 postcode areas in the UK

About 3,000 people phone the office every year in an weather data. Insurers suspect they are trying to collate information to make fraudulent damage claims.

How to avoid heading for an expensive fall

Skiing may be thrilling. But the fun on the piste can come at a price. One in ten participants will suffer injury while participating in this dangerous pastime.

The mishaps are numerous. Skiers break legs, tear carti-lages and rip their cruciate ligaments, the kind of serious injury more commonly suffered by footballers. Skiers can also cause injury to others, in collisions on the mountainside which can result in personal liability claims.

However, many still fly off to the slopes without taking out any insurance against injury. Others will assume that the policy they have purchased as part of their trip is adequate to cover them against any eventuality.

Those who have their own skis can often fail to check the extent of the cover. Some insurers may reject the claim for the loss of skis unless they have been kept in a locked storeroom, locked to a roof rack or kept in a car boot.

A Weekend Money survey of high street travel agents this week (see page 47) showed that anyone taking a skiing trip would routinely be offered insurance, often as part of the holiday deal.

However, the small print of the cover differed from tour operator to tour operator. This means that you should check the small print, especially if you are travelling to the US where the cost of medical treatment is far higher than in Europe. The more dangerous sports, such as snowboarding, are not always included, however, though they do feature in the British Airways Travel Shops policy.

Premiums can also be much higher if you are a senior citizen — United Vacations cover was double the normal adult rate. Travellers over the age of 75 will have to obtain an individual quote.

This is against the trend for policies covering less active forms of holidays where premiums for pensioners at some companies are beginning to fall (see page 49).

We discovered that most policies will provide some cover against an absence of snow. The exceptions are American Express and British Airways Travel Shops, which will not pay out if the snow fails to fall. Going Places will require written confirmation of the closure of pistes. Details of the cover will vary and the small print should be Which?, the Consumers' Association magazine, surveyed 270 policies and recommended you look for the following:

Tara Palmer-Tomkinson skied with the royals this winter

■ Medical expenses cover (if involved in an accident or taken ill while away).

Cover for cancelling your, holiday or for cutting it short. Personal liability cover (if someone sues you).

■ Baggage cover if bags are lost or stolen.

■ Cover for prepaid expenses. The policy should cover the cost of the ski pass and any other expenses paid in advance, in the event of cancellation. Cover for the cost of mountain-rescue. Cover for the theft of yourlift pass.....

For example, Direct Travel, one of the companies recom-mended by Which? offers a policy covering the following: £10 million of medical cover.

£2 million personal liability cover, £30,000 personal accident cover, for loss of sight or loss of limb, and cover for legal expenses of up to

Mark Shaw, Direct Travel manager, said that the high level of legal expenses cover was designed to protect skiers in America, who could easily find themselves the subject of legal action if they accidentally caused injury to another. He continued: "The biggest area of claim is for medica expenses following injury, and also for repatriation cost."

Mr Shaw said that the cover would include repatriation from the US. The policy also includes £150 to cover the hire cost of ski equipment, and £500 to cover a ski pass and a Other Which? best buys included policies from Europ Assistance, Inter Assurance, Travel Insurance Direct and World Cover Direct.

Cover for a one-week holiday in Europe for one adult will be between EZi and EZ4; family policies for two adults and two children will cost between £50 and £60.

If you have an annual travel policy, you should make sure that skiing holidays are

For example, the Europ Assistance annual travel insurance offers 17 days of skiing insurance. But the policy no longer covers skiing holidays in the US.

Frederique Pion of Europ Assistance said: Not every standard ski policy will cover ski equipment while it is in

She added that "no snow" cover was nearly always standard on policies. But she added: The definition of no snow will vary from policy to policy. Some will say that all types of slopes have to be out of Europ Assistance's policy defines no snow as: "If during the trip you are pre-vented from skiing for more than 24 hours because of total closure of the lift system." Other policies may pay out if all but the nursery slopes are out of action.

Which? says: "When you buy a policy make sure you. disclose anything that might affect your cover such as health problems."

Rose (ich their the times saturday January 25 1997 to guide you cautiously down the insurance slopes

Thomas Cook

Thomas Cook offers its own fully comprehensive cover, including insurance for ski equipment plus the standard no-snow guarantee. The premium for one week in Europe is £37.95 and £45.45 for two weeks. Cover for two weeks in the US is £72.85.

All brochures in Thomas Cook stipulate that holiday insurance must be taken out.
You can either accept the policy that the travel company has arranged, for example. Thomson Holidays uses Home and Overseas insurance, or choose a comparable policy with another company. The premium for a Thomson ski holiday in Europe is £35 for one week (up to nine nights) and £39 for 10-17 nights. For a trip to North America. cover costs £49 for one week and £55 for up to 17 nights. Piste closure is included. Skiers will be given free transport to another ski area if the officially prepared slopes are closed. Claims may be made for each day the slope was closed, if it was not possible to transport skiers elsewhere. The policy covers personal liability of £1 million (£2 million in the US) and medical and emergency expenses of £2 million.

Lunn Poly

Lunn Poly's Ski Care policy for holidays in Europe costs £36.95 for ten days, £41.95 for 17 days and £56.10 for 31 days. Worldwide cover starts at £57.90 for ten days, £67.95 for 17 days and £80.30 for 31 days. There is a reduction of 25 per cent on. premiums for children under 12 and children under two on the holiday return British Airways late are insured free of charge. As well as the E2 million personal liability, there are

Going Places

Going Places is owned by Airtours. Its winter sports insurance for a ski trip to Europe costs £37.95 for seven nights and E42.95 for 14 nights. Worldwide premiums are £66.75 for up to 14 nights.

The policy covers piste closure to a limit of £300. In the event of adverse weather at your booked ski resort and all ski lifts and ski schools being closed, the additional cost of transport/lift passes to an alternative resort will be paid. If no alternative is available, a benefit of up to £30 per day is available. The policy says compensation will not be paid unless you have obtained written confirmation of closure from the ski-lift operators. A limit of £1,500 will be paid on personal possessions and a limit of £10 million on emergency medical and associated expenses. For example, if you suffer an accident while skiing, including in the US, you will be flown home and additional transport and accommodation expenses incurred will be paid.

One of the ski brochures on display in Going Places was for United Vacations' Ski Freedom in the US. United Vacations' insurance premiums are as follows: £55 for nine days, £65 for 10-17 days and £75 for 18-23. The premium for children under 16 is much lower at $28 for nine days, £33 for 10-17 days and £38 for 18-23 days, but for senior citizens the cost increases to £110 for nine days, £130 for 10-17 days and £150 for 18-23 days.

surance prices start at E34 for five days in Europe, £40 for nine days, £46 for 17 days and £58 for up to 31 days. Rates for children under 16 years skiing in Europe are E30 for nine days and £34 for 17 days. Adult worldwide insurance premiums are £96 for 17 days and £128 for 31 days. If you plan to go snowboarding, play ice hockey, or attempt to mono-ski, these activities are included in the policy. Some other dangerous sports will incur a higher premium though, so check when taking out your BA policy. Medical cover is £5

One of the ski brochures available in the BA Travel Shop is for Crystal Holidays. Premiums are £34.50 for one week's cover and £39.50 for two weeks in Europe. For the US and Canada, the cost is £49 for one week and £63.50 for two weeks. Notably, the Crystal Supercare Insurance offers free cover for children aged 15 and under when all adults booking take the Crystal cover. If you decide to book a Crystal holiday but choose another company's insurance you are still able to take out Snow Guarantee/Piste Closure cover for £4.50 a week.

American Express

American Express Winter Sports and Adventure rates do not include a no-snow guarantee. However, off-piste skiing, snowboarding, ice hockey, ski jumping, bobsleighing, high-altitude skiing and ski acrobatics are included in the policy. For skiing in Europe, the premium is £30 for up to nine days, £38.50 for 17 days, £42 for 24 days and £43.50 for 31 days. If you are travelling to resorts in the US or Canthe cost is £51 for nine of up to 17 days, £70 for up to 24 days and £$4 for up to 31 days. Medical expenses of

Goldman's game plan is not for the faint-hearted

Turning your hobby into an

to take a risk

Henman's recent emergence in world tennis as a welcome break from British sporting decline. Michael Goldman, manager of the Momentum Premier Sports fund, also sees an investment opportunity.

Mr Goldman's offshore fund has grown 66 per cent in the eight months since its launch by spotting trends in sport worldwide. It held stock in First Team Sports, a company that makes rollerblades and protective pads, before the skating fad became wide enough for competitors to drive down profit margins.

He savs Henman's improvement could lead to a surge in general interest in tennis in England, with a corresponding effect on companies that have significant exposure to that part of the leisure market. Few spring to mind. Dunlon Slazenger is owned by its management: David Lloyd Leisure, operator of tennis-based sports centres, was a successful listed company and was taken over by Whitbread.

But this elusiveness is part of the game. It is not enough just to think laterally and buy anything that remotely fits the bill. Sport shares, particularly football, are starting to get a more realistic rating in the market. The "hunch" investors are going to have to work harder. Momentum is primarily a hedge fund manager, investing in the fast-moving and complicated world of derivatives and currencies, as well as equities. The sport fund also has a free-wheeling nature. Being registered offshore.

worth about R25,000. However, the value of the rand has vehicles, unlike unit trusts in Britain. This flexibility makes it riskier and investors' money is not covered by UK protection rules.

The fund could trade in Wimbledon debeniures, which guarantee buyers a Centre Court seat for every day of play for five years, in return for £20,000. They are traditionally in short supply, often staying in families for generations. But they can be traded on a secondary market in London on a matched bargain basis (some brokers carry lists of potential buyers and sellers). If you could persuade a holder of a 1996-2000 debenture to sell. Henman would put thousands on the resale price if he grows into a serious championship contender. How much would a fan pay to see the tennis equivalent of Halley's comet, a Brit in the men's final? Multiply the figure by ten and sell as corpo-

Olympie Stadium. But it has not been a hit with Australians and New Zealanders, but off, perhaps, by the £4,600 price tag. Now the offer has been extended to companies worldwide. Goldman says the sports fund is set to take a stake in the public share work as a decent and enjoy-able investment — it's a bit like investing in wine."

They only form a very small part of the fund, however. The shares that have fuelled its rise include Glasgow Rangers, the football club, and Nike, the sportswear manufacturer.

Mr Goldman expects a fall in the US market. About 25 per cent of its market exposure is configured to protect the fund against it. US stocks that have done well in the past for Momentum include Callaway, the golf club manufacturer. Sir. As the holder of some five endowment policies with Scot-tish Amicable I read with very great interest your insightful item about the policy of the Scottish Amicable towards its members on demunialisation. it is clearly unacceptable that directors are to receive shares, whilst members of the company are only to receive rather nebulous bonuses, which can only be realised at maturity of their policies in the future; and which may simply be clawed back at some later date (by annual bonuses). As you correctly note, given the tortuous language in which endowment policies are

Would any other policyhold-ers who also believe that Scottish Amicable is not acting in their best interests wish to join me in opposing this demutualisation?

For years, many travel insurers have given the over-65s a raw deal, imposing premium penalties on the round that elderly policyholders are more likely to make a claim.

However, with the benefit of accumulated claims data, and spurred by competition, some companies are recog-nising that being a pensioner does not automatically make someone a bad risk. The insurer's main concern with this age group is the medical risk. Lorinda Perry, of Perry, Gamble & Co. a firm of brokers that arranges policies sold by many travel agents, said: With more people adopting healthier lifestyles, the health of the elderly in general seems to be

GUARDIAN DIRECTS PEP pack explains how a PEP works and how your money will be invested. But if you have any additional questions then there's a team of trained staff ready to take your call. Just telephone on 0500 28 28 20 between 8am and 9pm Monday to Friday and 10am to 4pm Saturday and Sunday.

The information reflects our understanding of current legislation and tax regulations which are both subject to change

can go down as well as up. On the encashment of the units you may receive back less than you invested. In the event of the income from the trust being insufficient to meet the annual manager's fee and other allowable expenses, then the manager reserves the right to be remanerated from the capital value of the trust. Tax legislation may change in the future. The value of any tax relief depends upon the financial circumstances of the investor

The nation's formidable Old Lady

The Bank of England, also popularly known as the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street, was set up in 1694 and is one of the world's oldest central banks. It started life as a commercial bank but was nationalised in 1946. By then it had already come to behave like a public institution and had built up a formidable reputation. In The Wealth of Nations in 1776, Adam Smith wrote that this was no ordinary bank but "a great engine of state".

■ Bank roles. The Bank is the central bank of the United Kingdom, acting as bank to the Government and the financial system. The Bank sees its three main roles as maintaining the value of the nation's money, ensuring the stability of the financial system and promoting its efficiency and competitiveness. Central banks have become extraordinarily powerful in the modern age as governments have with-drawn from full-scale intervention in their economies and turned to monetary policy as the centrepiece of economic management.

■ Monetary policy. This is the central business of central bankers. Monetary policy seeks to safeguard the currency and provide a framework for non-inflationary economic growth through the management of credit, the exchange rate and interest rates. Of these three, only the last remains. Controls on the amount of money banks could lend were abandoned in 1971 and attempts to target the exchange rate ended in September 1992, when sterling was ejected from the exchange-rate mechanism.

In the past, the Bank could try to influence the level of sterling through intervention. Using the country's gold and foreign exchange reserves when necessary, it would buy sterling in exchange for foreign currencies when it wanted to stop the pound falling, and sell sterling if it wanted to curb a rise. Nowadays, there is virtually no intervention because government policy is to allow the exchange rate to float freely.

■ Interest rates and inflation. Interest rates are now the key weapon of monetary policy. The level of rates affects borrowing, consume demand, investment, the economy's output and ultimately prices. After the 1992 sterling crisis, Norman Lamont, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, set up a new monetary policy framework to replace the ERM. Its centrepiece is an inflation target of 25 per cent or less, and rates are now set to achieve that target. It is the Bank's role to advise the Chancellor on the appropriate level of interest rates. To this end, since 1992, it has published an Inflation Report every quarter, containing a detailed analysis of trends in prices and an independent forecast of inflation. Monthly monetary meetings between the Chancellor and the Bank have been put on a formal footing and minutes are published six weeks after each meeting. These gatherings are popularly known as the Ken and Eddie show after Kenneth Clarke and Eddie George, current Chancellor and Governor.

■ Independence. Because the Bank's advice is now open to public scrutiny, many argue that it has gained influence. But the Government stopped short of giving the Bank total independence from political control, the thorny issue which has exercised Governors from the legendary Montagu Norman, the Bank's longest-serving Governor, to Eddie George today. Of Britain's main parties, only the Liberal Democrats have committed themselves to giving full independence.

■ Banking supervision. In 1979 the Bank was given statutory responsibility for authorising and supervising all deposit-taking institutions and supervising all deposit-taking institutions operating in the United Kingdom, but it had already exercised informal surveillance over many institutions operating in the City of London for many years. The main purpose of this role is to protect depositors with banks against the risk of losing their money. The Barings crisis of 1890, when the highly respected merchant bank was sitting on a nile of respected merchant bank was sitting on a pile of worthless Argentine bonds and faced bankruptcy, threw up the issue that remains the central question of banking supervision even today. When is it the Bank's duty, if ever, to rescue companies which deserve to go bust yet in so doing may create a financial panic that could destabilise the whole financial system? The Bank rescued Barings in the 19th century by bank rescued barings in the 19th century by borrowing gold from France and Russia, but modern views have turned away from spectacular bail-outs. The Bank stood back when a modern-day Barings was hit by trading losses incurred by Nick Leeson and waited for a private sector purchaser to ride to the rescue.

■ City cheerleader. The Bank takes a lead in promoting the competitiveness of the City. The Bank is currently spearheading an effort to prepare for the advent of a single European currency. Whether or not Britain joins, the Bank wants business and London's markets ready to compete against rival centres in Paris

JANET BUSH

THE BANK'S MOST PUBLIC FACE

The Bank of England is 1 probably most familiar to the public as the name on banknotes. It is the sole issuer of notes in England and Wales. Although Scottish and

Notes originally represented deposits of gold coin and bullion piled high in the Bank's vaults. Until 1931. when Britain came off the gold standard, they could be exchanged for gold at a fixed rate: hence the words "I promise to pay" on the face of notes. The notes are designed and printed af the Bank's own. printing works. The average life of its banknotes ranges from a year for years for a £50 sheer beauty and complexity banknotes through the centuries - as well as piles of glittering gold bars - take a trin to the Bank's own museum in the City.

AMERICAN FOOTBALL: NATION WILLS GREEN BAY TO BEAT NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS

Parcells, the Patriots coach, discusses tactics with Bledsoe, the quarterback, during final practice for the Super Bowl in New Orleans tomorrow

FROM OLIVER HOLT IN NEW ORLEANS

BRIAN LEE is blind now but he has a favourite image stored up in his mind's eye. Every night, between numbers at the Old Absinthe House Bar on Bourbon Street this week, he has hushed his blues band and shared the memory with the lucky few who have squeezed into the darkness before the queues start outside the door.

There are probably none of you ever heard of Tobin Roat," he says, "none of you who could tell me what position he played. Well, he was the QB or the Packers back in the Fifties. He could run, he could throw, he could do everything, baby." His long beard twitches and then the harmonica starts to wail.

They have existed on memories like that for 30 years now, Green Bay Packers, feasting in particular on the legend of Vince Lombardi, the coach their name forever to the golden age of the sport, a time when athletic ability and honest endeavour on the field counted for more than image and trash-talking.

Lombardi was an intenselydriven disciplinarian with something of the aura of Bill Shankly, a coach who had an attitude to the pursuit of victory similar to that of the revered Liverpool manager. Winning is not everything, he once said. "It is the only thing." Such was his reputation that the National Football League (NFL) named the Super Bowl trophy after him when he died.

Tomorrow night; here at the Louisiana Superdome in the heart of the city, the Packers will have a golden chance to win that trophy for the first time. Super Bowl XXXI is likely to be closer-lought than many of its recent predecessors but Green Bay are still short-priced favourites to overcome New England Patriots and extend the domination of ence to a 13-year stretch.

seems to be rooting for the Packers. Partly it is because they have become the nation's favourite underdogs in the long years of drought since Lombardi left after their second Super Bowl triumph. But the stronger reason is that the Packers represent an idealised image of what Americans want their teams to be. They respect them because they play outdoors in the bitter Wisconsin winters at their famous Lambeau Field rather than retreating to a covered stadium like their near neighbours, Minnesota Vikings, and they warm to them because they play in a small working-class community that values that supporters in larg-Everyone in the United er metropolitan areas can see

The reality, of course, is not quite the same and the Packers' whiter-than-white image was tarnished when their quarterback, Brett Favre, admitted before the start of last season that he was undergoing treatment for addiction to painkillers.

Still, when that is compared with the seedy antics of Dallas Cowboys players, the succession of scandals they have brought upon themselves in the past two years, the drug convictions and the battery charges, it is little wonder that the country is searching around for a more worthy bearer for the accolade of

'America's Team". Favre, a gritty, charismatic leader of men, is fast becoming America's hero, too. If he can steady himself at the beginning of tomorrow's game, a time when he is notoriously inconsistent and over-excitable, the Packers should subdue the Patriots. whose only other appearance 1986, when they were routed 46-10 by Chicago Bears.

In Xanadu did Wigan a stately ski-jump decree

IT IS with a hand trembling with delight and disbelief that I smite the keyboard for this week's offering. For I learn, to my inexpressible delight that - after a decade and more of championing from this column - planning permission has at last been given for the first British ški-iump. It took a place as bold as Wigan to give support to the idea. Where local authorities all over Britain have held back. Wigan alone march forward. Permission has been granted for a ski-jumoing hill as part of the huge "Xanadu" ski centre project.

A 60-metre hill would be big enough for international competition among the Lowlander jumping nations; this would be too daunting for beginners and there are hopes for hills of 25 and 40 metres as well. Wigan has always been a centre for stout-hearted sporting people and the Wigan ski-jump at Xanadu would extend that tradition in a wonderful fashion: a stately pleasure-dome for the young eagles.

All out of love

All America has thrilled to the story of Michael Volpe, the alienated baseball fan. Volpe, a person formerly devoted to San Francisco Giants, withdrew his support from the club when they traded the slugging Matt Williams to Chicago White Sox. Volpe packed up three decades worth of Giants memorabilia and posted it back to the club, with the message: "I am divorcing you from my baseball life. He then wrote to all the other 27 major league baseball teams. offering to be their fan and asking why he should sup-port their club.

This has provoked national debate, and many responses. John Maroon, PR man at Baltimore Orioles, had Volpe driven from his home in Virginia to the ball-park, gave him lunch and a tour of the stadium. Perhaps it is the most rational approach to the concept of being a fan yet devised: what's in it for me?

down the list, and that explains why the most popular rugby shirts are those of New Zealand, France and England. The retention of the gold jumper was not commercially viable."

Clearly, the first question to ask when considering any sporting outfit is: does it look all right with jeans? That is why we got the unspeakable grey England football strip. Oh, and a new-style Aussie shirt costs A$120.

Hale and hearty Fat goalie round-up: José-Luis Chilavert, the Paraguay international, returning to his Argentinian club Velez Sarsfield, was criticised in the deliciously-named Olé magazine for an excess of adipose tissue. Chilavert solved the problem by seeking out the reporter, one Juan Pablo Mendez, and whacking him. Meanwhile, René Higuita, who retired in Medellin, Colombia, was blown up, has announced that he will now unretire. His club said they would be happy to accommodate him - once he has solved his weight problem.

I have received an intriguing letter from Bob Stone, who quotes from a letter sent out to members of Surrey County Cricket Club: "In view of the recent cricketing events within the club, it has been decided that 'Cricker' should be an agenda item at the forthcoming AGM."

Lion cows Wolves

It is with some glee that I report that Lofty the Lion is in trouble. Lofty, the Bolton Wanderers mascot, named insultingly after Nat Loft-house, the Lion of Vienna, has been upsetting supporters of Wolverhampton Wanderers. They found the antics of a man dressed up in a stupid furry suit intimidating" at the match between the two clubs last weekend. Lofty's half-time routine angered the Wolverhampton away faris, so much so that they showered him with pies. and a brawl broke out as spectators fought each other to get at the cuddly lion.

"He was intimidating the crowd at half-time, and that was stupid," Michael Bates, treasurer of the Wolves Supporters Club, said. Bolton's chief executive, Des McBain. responded with that ghastly archness that invariably afflicts people when they discuss mascots: "I have discussed the incident with Lofty and he is quite upset about the whole thing."

Blood runs thick

More goalies: Aaron and Darryi Flahavan are brothers and goalies and this week, they were on opposite sides, Darryl for Southampton reserves and Aaron for Portsmouth reserves. Life is a hard business for goalkeepers: after ten minutes, Darryl came out of his area to head clear, and collected a boot in the head. He left the pitch covered in blood, returned after 15 minutes and five stitches, but had to surrender at half-time. At the other end, Aaron was a spectator as Portsmouth

RUGBY UNION

BY DAVID HANDS, RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

FROM small beginnings little more than a year ago, the Heineken Cup - the European club compension - has climbed into adulthood with remarkable speed. Judged on quality and popularity, the tournament, which reaches its final in Cardiff today when Leicester play Brive, has already achieved a status little lower than that of international rugby. That it has done so despite the doubts raised last October, when ITV withdrew its support less than a formight before the 1996-97 competition began, is testimony to the belief in the concept from the clubs involved. Whatever the result this afternoon at the Arms Park, marketing next season should be considerably easier, given that the match will be televised live in 18 countries.

That alone places a responsibility upon European Rugby Cup Ltd, the organisers, to ensure quality rather than quantity. The size of the 1997-98 tournament is likely to remain the same, with 20 sides involved but playing home and away, and it is vital that the competition does not outrun its strength merely because more clubs want a share of a pot which, if small this season, will surely bubble over in years to come.

"It's important the quality is not diluted," Bob Dwyer, the Leicester director of coaching, said yesterday. Twenty clubs is plenty and doubling the number of matches at this evel is quite enough. It should help to ensure that more players become available to

That few would have forecast a final between Leicester and Brive has been part of the competition's charm this season, yet both arrive in Cardiff unbeaten in Europe and worthy representatives of England and France. On the back of their efforts, both chibs have elevated individuals to national squads, most notably David Venditti, the Brive centre, who last Saturday ties sustain their ambitions for a cross-border competition this weekend when Paris University Club entertain Oxford and Rome host Cambridge, though financial restrictions inhibit the expansion of this tournament. The have shown an ability to win away, which, thus far, has affected their league displays in the French championship. Belfast is never the easiest of venues, as Harlequins discovered in the autumn, but Brive beat Ulster and Caledonia, the best of the Scottish district teams. Likewise, Leicester be-came one of only two English clubs (Northampton, in the European Conference, being the other) to win in France. against Pau.

Leicester will start today as slight favourites, but will justify that only if they achieve a significant advantage in one of the game's basic areas, most probably the lineout. That is a phase to which Brive have paid particular attention this week, knowing the prowess of Martin Johnson and Matt Poole, his sometimes unconsidered partner at lock.

Dwyer believes that the clubs are similar in style, yet there is a physical presence in the Brive back row which Leicester lack, notably that offered by Gregori Kacala, the Polish flanker. Kacala weighs in at around 17 stone and many of Brive's forward charges will start with him. There is an onus, therefore, on Neil Back and Dean Richards to arrest his progress before he hits the Leicester midfield.

The beauty of this game, though, is that both sides can strike from so many different parts of the pitch - from full back, where John Liley and Sebastien Viars have attacking ambitions, from midfield and from the back row.

ence is that between Austin Healey and Philippe Carbonneau at scrum half. Carbonneau may be more content to be the servant of those outside him than Healey, whose pure pace and eye for the break have catapulted him into the England squad. If this game is to be won by a Hash of Intuitive genius - and it may be - then Healey could be the man to do

n the days before Dean Richards, the Leicester back division was the envy of England. Four times during the 1983-84 season, five of them played together for England, among them Paul Dodge and Clive Woodward, that superbly-complementary pair of centres, and anyone who suggested that the club would develop the best pack in the land would have been laughed to scorn. They did, though, and in the 1990s the Leicester backs became the target of distinctly aundiced comments. Even at the start of this season, they looked to be playing, under the direction of Bob Dwyer, a game with which they were ill at ease, but they have not reached the Heineken Cup final on the back of Richards and his forwards alone - now they have a hard and skilful core, at the heart of which are Will Greenwood and Austin v. men from the North It is no coincidence that

Healey is now in the England senior squad as the replacement scrum half and that Greenwood is to captain England A. Their developmen has been one of the most exciting aspects of this season and the responsibility awarded to Greenwood is a sign of a player maturing in every way, Even though Dwyer dismiss

Dwyer, the former Australia World Cup coach, said, "lt requires a special player with a special attitude and a special set of skills to play at that level. When he left Durham University, the City beckoned employment as a broker and a place at Harlequins. "I was starting to enjoy myself in London, I made a lot of friends at Harlequins and when I left last year there was no antagonism," Greenwood, 24, said, "but Leicester offered me a great opportunity people may have thought it easy for me, to play in the Quins back division with people like Will Carling and Jim Staples, but Leicester allowed me to see what I

Initially, Greenwood had to make the decision whether to play professional rugby fulltime. questions of the England selectors. I'll do so." Greenwood discovered swiftly that reputations counted for nothing at Welford Road, either with the new director of rugby or his play-ing colleagues. When I first arrived it looked as though there were two separate entities, backs and forwards, two ideas about how to play the game," he said. "Bob has got everyone working together, but we haven't over-complicated things in the backs and, slowly, all the hard work of the past few months is paying dividends.

"I had to convince Bob first of all that I was worth a place, and that wasn't easy. I picked up a dead leg against West Hartlepool, pulled a hamstring a wasn't until we played Llanelfelt we turned a corner. I'm as dence in me — I try to give the forwards a target to aim for, but at the same time I can help to bring the backs out of their shells. Maybe some of them have been in awe of the forwards in the past, perhaps they have trodden warily."

At 6ft 5in and 15 stone. Greenwood can happily stand toe-to-toe with many a lock. but among his assets are a feel for the ball and an eye for the gap, which, once he is halfway through, creates havoc for defenders, since he is light on his feet for so big a man.

Responsibility rests easily on his shoulders, the legacy of Richard, his father, who briefly captained England from the back row in 1969 before an eve injury disrupted his international career. Since Greenwood Sr also coached England, in the mid-1980s, the rugby pedigree is sound. in their inexorable rise from North East I in 1987-88 to sixth place in the Courage Clubs Championship second division, the team from south Yorkshire has narrowed the gap from 67 places to 13 on Harlequins. Cup defeats by Wilmslow, in 1971, and at Orrell, in 1973 and 1986, have taught the London club respect when it comes to comparatively unknown Northern opponents. Harlequins circumvented the han on their cameras last week by getting pictures of Rotherham's defeat against Wakefield from Yorkshire Television. Not that they give much clue to a narrow, sloping pitch, on which several reputations have come unstuck. Harlequins, twice cup winners, include eight internationals and a crowd of 4,000 will be shoehorned into the ground

Jason Leonard's elbow operation means that Will Carling assumes the Harlequins captaincy. His opposite number, John Dudley, is a club bouncer. Will is a cult hero nationally and John is a cult hero in Rotherham," Ged Glynn, the Rotherham chief coach, said of the No 8, part of a mobile back row alongside Craig West and

Proud record precedes Rotherham

Dean Lax's 70 per cent lace-kicking success rate for Rotherham suffers only slightly by comparison with Thierry Lacroix. "It's harder for Thierry to miss, I know, but Dean, like the rest of the side, has a great opportunity to show just how far this club has come," Glynn said.

RUGBY LEAGUE: AMATEURS CONVINCED THEY CAN CAUSE CUP UPSETS

Professionals in for rude awakening

By Christopher Irvine

FOR first and second division clubs emerging from winter hibernation, the third round of the Silk Cut Challenge Cup this weekend could be a rude awakening. Their amateur opponents are match-fit and are arguably better prepared. The professional sides' previous coropetitive matches were last August, around the time that the amateurs were starting their season. The move to summer and the fact that the Challenge Cup is now effectively a pre-season competition, appears to have increased the possibility of West Hull became the first amateur side to reach the last 16 last year, when they eliminated two professional opponents, Prescot and York, before they eventually succumbed to Wakefield Trinity. They were hoping for a repeat of their exploits last night at Dewsbury. For clubs who have found an inactive winter tough going, gate revenue, courte-sy of automatic home draws for 19 first and second division sides, will be welcome. Hull Kingston Rovers and Keighley Cougars are now both being run by administrators. Bramley, who have just come out of administration after moving in with Leeds at Headingley, are at Swinton in the only all-professional tie.

Thatto Heath, the Lancashire Cup holders, could trouble Workington Town, who were relegated from the Stones Super League last season. The St Helensbased side last year knocked out Chorley. now known as Lancashire Lynx, who play Hull Dockers in their first match at Preston today. Woolston, the leading amateur club for three seasons, stand one of the best chances of progressing, at

Widnes have given John Devereux permission to play for Sale rugby union club in their Pilkington Cup match today at Orrell, rather than in their tie against Clayton 24 hours later, but insist he will be recalled for their Challenge Cup fourth round match on February 8 or 9.

Doug Laughton, the Widnes manager said: "We have a good relationship with Sale and appreciate it is a big game for them, but we will definitely have John back for the next round if we win through."

A Rugby Football League tribunal yesterday ordered Oldham Bears to pay £28,000 to Workington for Vince Fawcett, centre, who arrived this week at Boundary Park, the club's new home,

One Man, beaten upwards of 30 lengths on the three previous occasions he has run at Cheltenham, should be able to put the past behind him as he faces just three rivals in the Pillar Property Investments Chase (3.20). "If he cannot do his job tomorrow, you would have to be disappointed. If he doesn't win, I would have to put it down to Cheltenham. Let's hope he answers the questions. He's been working since the weather broke and I had him ready to run more than a week ago," Richards

While One Man will not be a betting proposition, it is hard to make out a case for his rivals, especially as the two 11year-olds. Barton Bank and since April 1994. Although Addington Boy faces a tougher task in the Ladbroke Trophy Handicap (2.10), the Tripleprint Gold Cup winner still looks ahead of the handicapper. The nineyear-old previously lost out to Challenger Du Luc in the Murphy's Gold Cup over course and distance, having slipped on the home turn. With ground conditions and a 3lb pull in the weights in his favour, he should gain revenge today and advertise his Festival claims.

Richards is particularly fond of General Command, undefeated in three starts this term, and he looks capable of giving weight away to his rivals in the Pertemps Great Yorkshire Chase (3.00) at Doncaster. Golden Spinner rates the main danger.

Away from the gaze of the television cameras, there are several tempting betting prop-

at home, he knew it was money well spent. "He's a brilliant jumper," the Newmarket trainer said yesterday. On his debut at Ascot, Lear Jet jumped superbly and he looks a value proposition in the Finesse Four-Year-Old Hurdle at Cheltenham (1.35) where Shooting Light is likely to be favourite. Santa Concerto for virtuoso performance

1.00: Ali s Alibi, runner-up to the useful Island Chief and Stormy Coral on his last two starts, is weighted to win but is rather one-paced and looks worth opposing at skinny odds. Solba won here twice last term but appears to have lost his confidence. Fiveleigh Builds almost cer-tainly needed his first run for two months at Ludlow nine days ago when carrying top weight, and he can enhance a good strike rate off a 2lb lower mark.

1.30: King Pin arguably needs to improve to oblige, but after winning at Catterick last time Peter Beaumont said: "He is potentially one of the best horses we have had and the main target is the EBF final at Chehenham." Beaumont's horses are in cracking form and today's longer trip and more galloping track should suit. Shanavogh beat Paper-ising at Haydock but the versatile Lance Armstrong looks a bigger danger.

2.00: Lord Of The West has the best chasing form but his jumping is far from fluent. Crown Equerry makes a quick reappearance after winning well at Carlisle on Monday, but all eyes will be on Santa Concerto. A winner of four of his seven starts, Lenny Lungo's highly rated runner could be even better over fences, and he can make a successful chasing debut as long as he is straight enough after an 11-

2.45: Pridwell is not genuine but saves his best for this track and, if he reproduces the form which saw him finish third in last year's Champion Hurdle, he will go close. With Muse likely to set a good pace, Castle Sweep's suspect jumping will be put under strain.

Large Action has done nothing wrong this term and can enhance his Champion Hurdle credentials.

2.25: Ionio would probably have beaten Sea Victor here last time but for a sloppy jump at the last. The form of that fast-run race has worked out particularly well, with the winner obliging at Kempton last Saturday and fourth-placed Endowment also scoring subsequently. Having finished fifth in the 1994 St Leger, today's extra half-mile should suit Ionio. Mighty Moss has done little wrong and was not helped by a slowly run race last time when just beaten at Uttoxeter. Inn At The Top, a course and distance winner, and Hoh Warrior also merit

3.35: Several are in with a chance here, including Native Mission who made a promising reappearance at Uttoxeter after a lengthy absence and is well treated on his best form. Time Won't Wait, a course and distance winner, would have gone close to winning on his seasonal debut at Havdock last week but for a last fence blunder and he should reverse form with Political Tower.

However, Lord Dorcet, winner of novice chases at Ascot and Sandown last season, is open to further improvement and ran well enough under a big weight at Kelso eight days ago after a six-week break. Previously he had been pitched in against Sound Man and Viking Flagship. This oppo-sition should be more to his liking, 4.10: The form of Society Magic's second to Disallowed looks nothing special, with the winner and third having been well beaten since. The consistent Jackson 3.55: Imperial Vintage will Park has the best form and should be spot on after a good third behind Rossel at Kelso recently. However, Royal Action was a fair performer on the Flat and ran well behind yesterday's Doncaster winner. Le Teteu, at Fakenham on his hurdling debut. This track should be more suitable.

TENNIS: WORLD No 1 SHOUTS THE ODDS AFTER CONFIDENTLY DISPOSING OF MUSTER IN SEMI-FINALS

FROM MICHAEL HENDERSON IN MELBOURNE

IMPERIOUS in style, every bit as much as the score of 6-1. 7-6, 6-3 suggests, Pete Sampras wore a crown on centre court here yesterday as he reached the final of the Australian Open. "Im the king of the castle," he seemed to tell Thomas Muster, "and you'll need more than a rusty old musket to unseat me on this patch."

Sampras, the world No I, will meet Carlos Moya, the 20-year-old rookie, tomorrow, and he is the strong and obvious favourite to win his second Australian Open title. If he shows the dominance against the Spaniard that he did yesterday, it could be a one-sided contest, for all Moya's brave words.

"I feel I have one more match in me," Sampras said afterwards, like a man who can sense his ninth grand-slam title over the next hill. At the end of a hard week, when he was taken to five sets in extreme heat by Dominik Hrbaty and Alberto Costa, he has played like a great champion. But first there is a gifted youngster to beat.

In victory he was as expansive as a sportsman is ever likely to be, without straying into boastfulness. "I had great rhythm, got an early break after an extraordinary rally in and it went from there. It was hard to maintain but I managed to set the time of the match in that opening set, even though Thomas should have won the second."

Sampras was formidable in that first set. Muster was sent ruming that way and this winning only eight points when Sampras served and surrendering two of his own service games to go 5-0 down. Not even his noisy Austrian fan club could assist him.

Having concluded the first set with his sixth ace, Sampras found Muster more resolute in the second. "Break him!" a German voice implored from the bleachers, and their man duly obliged in the sixth game.

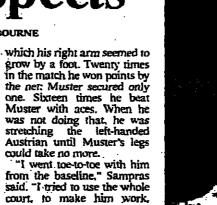

At 5-2 up and again at 5-4, when he was within a point of taking the set on his own service, Muster was almost level. It was then that Sampras revealed his true quality as he took four successive games to carry a stronger rhythm into the tie-break. Muster netted when Sampras returned a smash and that set was his, too. The Austrian cheerleaders were shocked into silence.

Sampras was really singing now, breaking Muster in the second game of the third set likes to play. As for Moya, he can expect no mercy. Sampras noted that he beat Michael Chang in straight sets and gave him his due for achieving such a notable victory, but he has not come this far to lose. "Moya has won his matches convincingly and is confident, but my form is getting better and better," Sampras said.

Muster looked like a man who had been run into the ground, as he had. "I had an excellent chance to take that second set off him and failed," he said. "Once he gets ahead, he is very tough to beat.

"I tried to open up the court but you have to risk a lot to do that and he covers it so well. Moya has a good chance, though. He is playing well and, if he can take it to five sets. I don't know how Pete cope with another match like that." ☐ David Sherwood and

Welsh hopes given boost by Gough

THE prospect of a first Welsh win in the British national quash championships edged closer at the Northern Club in Manchester yesterday when Alex Gough, of Newport, beat John Russell, the youngest player in the second round at 17. 9-1. 10-9, 9-7 to reach a quarter-final today against Julian Wellings (Colin McQuillan writes). If he can beat Wellings, Gough, 26, ranked No 25 in the world and the No 3 seed, will fancy his chances in the semi-finals tomorrow, when he will probably meet Stephen Meades, the No 2 seed.

In the top half of the women's championship, experience established itself far more firmly yesterday with Cassandra Jackman, the No I seed, beating Claire Fleetwood 9-0, 9-1, 9-2 in just 16 minutes to earn a meeting with Fiona Geaves, the HOCKEY: Injuries will deprive Old Loughtonians, second behind Cannock in the premier division of the National League, of two key players — Julian Halls and Nick Thompson — for their home match against Canterbury tomorrow. Halls has a damaged hand and Thumpson a knec injury. Cannock, at full strength, entertain Southgate. for whom Shaw and Duthie are doubtful starters.

Loughtonians' lament

Clubs sue for peace

RUGBY UNION: England's top clubs believe they are close to resolving long-running differences with the Rugby Football Union over direction of the game in the professional era. After meeting in Northampton yesterday. Epruc. the body representing the leading clubs, said its members were committed to England's success in the five nations' championship and would release players for games.

Lyle struggles

GOLF: Sandy Lyle faces the possibility of missing the cut in the Phoenix Open at Scottsdale, Arizona, after an opening round of 75. Lyle is 13 shots behind the leader, the US Open champion, Steve Jones, who barely made it to the tee on time before completing a nine-under-par 62 to take a two-stroke lead over Nick Price. Jones had miscalculated the time it would take to walk from the driving range to the 1st tee.

Downhill equality

SKIING: Isolde Kostner, of Italy, and Heidi Zurbriggen, of Switzerland, shared first place in the World Cup downhill event in Cortina d'Ampezzo, Italy, vesterday, both women clocking Imin 30.81sec. Luc Alphand, of France, won the men's downhill at Kitzbühel, Austria, with 2min 12.55sec over two legs to push Werner Franz. of Austria, into second place. William Bessem. of Switzerland, was third.

Rochester plays host

CYCLING: Rochester, in Kent, will host the British round of the World Cup competition, the seventh of the ten races. The 148-mile event on August 17 will include some sections of the route when the Tour de France came to Britain in 1994. Britain first staged a round of the World Cup in Newcastle upon Tyne, in 1989, before the race moved to Brighton (1990 and 1991), followed by a five-year run in Leeds.

Jones plots Aintree course for Le Teteu

BOB JONES, the Newmarket trainer, has Aintree in mind for Le Teteu after his authoritative success in the £15,000added Rossington Main Novices' Hurdle at Doncaster yesterday. He is hoping the colt can make amends for the narrow defeat of his stablemate, Jack Button, at the 1995 Grand National meeting. 'Aintree owes us one." Jones said.

Le Teteu's task yesterday was made easier by the withdrawal, because of a bruised foot, of the likely favourite, Alzulu. In Alzulu's absence, his main rival became the 11-8 favourite, Hurricane Lamp, who held a slight advantage coming into the straight.

However, the race was as good as over once Russ Garritty sent Le Teteu to the front before the second last. Maintaining

Le Teteu is almost certain to miss the Cheltenham Festival, where Jones plans to be represented in the Triumph Hurdle by Lear Jet, who runs at Cheltenham this

The Cheltenham Festival is also on the agenda for Jathib after his decisive win in the Balby Novices' Chase. Merrita Jones's gelding, who took his tally to three out of four over fences this season, is pencilled in for the Arkle Challenge Trophy.

"He needed to win today and now I

Bell Staffboy shrugged off a 289-day absence to defeat the favourite, Puritan. by seven lengths in the Doncaster Sponsorship Club Handicap Chase. Bell Staffboy was racing for the first time for trainer John O'Shea, who said: "I expected us not to get beaten today. He was well handicapped on his old form and he's been showing lots of spark." O'Shea is hoping that Go Ballistic will be good enough to tackle the Gold Cup. "He's going to run in the Agfa Diamond Chase at Sandown next weekend and, if he wins that, he will go for the Gold Cup," he said. "If he gets beaten, he'll go for the Ritz Club Chase followed by the

Barber's

PREDICTING the weather can involve some elaborate methods but for point-to-point trainers it has been alarmingly easy in recent years. Dry weather and firm ground have become the norm: welly boots have given way to deck shoes. and horses which revel in mud have had few outings.

Richard Barber. Britain's most successful point-to-point trainer, has been forced to look specifically for horses which favour arid conditions and he runs one today, Old Mill Stream, in the ladies' open at the Hursley Hamble-don meeting. Old Mill Stream will carry Polly Curling but stable companion Fantus, who won the Cheltenham Foxhunters' in 1995, will miss his engagement in the men's open because of the ground, leaving Fosbury to represent the yard. Fantus run next week at Larkhill but only if there is substantial rain. The fear of breaking horses down is endemic in racing and few know the anguish better than Stewart Pike, who is nursing Proud Sun back to firmess at his Devon home. Proud Sun will be ridden gently this morning as part of his recuperation and his sister, Front Cover, will tackle Old Mill Stream this afternoon. Rilly Goschen partners Pike's mare, Shirley Vickery rides Arctic Chill and Alison Dare is on Down The Mine in an interesting race.

Ben Poliock, despite nursing a broken nose, will ride Holmby Mill, the horse which did the damage while schooling, at tomorrow's Essex Farmers & Union fixture.

Caroline Saunders will also run Sunny Mount and Mr Branigan there and plans to saddle Beau Dandy at today's Cambridgeshire Harriers fixture, which has been rescheduled twice. Racing in the Northern area begins with the West Percy & Milvain meeting tomorrow when local champion Andrew Parker begins the defence of his title.

Six-shooters aim to take game into a new arena

hen tomorrows FA Cup tie against Chel-sea at Stamford Bridge is over, the Liverpool first-team squad will fly direct to Amsterdam to begin an odyssey very different from any other English club. While Liverpool are away. Manchester United, and possibly Arsenal, could usurp them at the top of the FA Carling Premiership; but nei-ther will keep such exalted company, or figure in such a setting, as Liverpool.

Steve McManaman, John Barnes and company are to play Ajax, AC Milan, and Rangers in an inaugural European 6ix's, under the sliding roof of the new £70 million Amsterdam ArenA in a concept devised by Craig Johnston and headed by Johan Cruyff. The teams will play six-a-side football on real grass, and in a format that laces the quick movement and high skills of the indoor game with live appearances from

The venture is coated with commercialism, or at least with speculation, in which Johnston, the former Australia and Liverpool winger, says he has invested EL2 million. He has sold his other business interests, in sport and television, and even sold his Harley Davidson to finance

Despite all the showbiz trappings, though, pure football is the aim: McManaman can take on Maldini, and Roberto Baggio and John Barnes can show their touches: Cruyff lends his name and his technical expertise to the venture because he believes that the modern game desperately requires a concentration on ball skill, as opposed to physical

Though the first European event is held in Cruyff's home city, and though Ajax is about to announce a successor to Louis van Gaal as coach, the assumption that Cruyff will return to his roots is unfounded. Instead, Morten Olsen, the former Denmark international, will join Ajax this summer. Cruyff is happy out of management at the moment, involved to the hilt with 6ix's. and says that, just as he helped to found the Ajax youth school on the principles of teaching real skills to schoolboys, he believes the small-sided game is "the most effective way to recapture the lost talents of street soccer". With commercialism mixing with idealism in the ArenA on Monday and Tuesday, as four of the Continent's elite show their paces, the gathering of yet more figureheads of the leading clubs points to an acceleration towards the much-vaunted European Super League, Franz Beckenbauer, the president of Bayern Munich, Roberto Benega, the president of Juventus, and their counterparts from Real Madrid and Paris Saint-Germain will all be studying this futuristic tournament.

And where football people, entrepreneurs, industrialists and sponsors come together. you can be sure that the next element towards a breakaway elite will be advanced. There will be six of the Premiership clubs represented by their managers, and some of them, perhaps thinking at the outset that Liverpool are taking a short midwinter break, will see the serious and financial implications behind it. For a start, each of the four clubs involved next week receives £125,000 for bringing its stars; they can win as much again in a tournament that, without jeopardising the play-ers unduly, is intended to have a competitive edge.

Curiously, the tournament received most publicity in legal spat that becomes inev-itable where high finance meets sport. Right to the eleventh hour, Philips, the electrical giant based in Eindhoven that has a financial stake in the ArenA, threatened court action against the other partners in the new stadium. This was because Philips, having earlier rejected an opportunity to sponsor the 6ix's. objected to Sony, its Japanese rival, projecting its name through the event. Consequently, Philips, by making its objection so public, has helped to sell the first 25,000 tickets towards the promoters' plan for at least 40,000, in the ArenA over the two nights.

in some ways, Johnston's idea reinvents the wheel - it is football as we know it with a new spin. Having been re-sponsible, while a Liverpool player, for Anfield Rap, the restless Johnson travelled the world and wondered why small-sided leagues have not sprouted as an alternative to uneconomic reserve leagues.

e came to two main conclusions — the dif-ferent formats in-volved in the United States, Germany, Austria, Spain and England gave a fractured appearance to the notion, and the different surfaces, Astroturf, day or wood, together with perimeter boards, meant a risk of injuries that deterred managers.

Johnston's partners, having to restrain his ebullience and trying to guide his pioneering but erratic themes, have maintained the integrity of football, but recognised the attraction of music and technology. Thus, when at 8pm on wait in the wings for the first game of the night, the lights will go down, the big screen will replay highlights from 1966 — when Ajax beat Bill Shankly's Liverpool side 5-1 - and the Liverpool anthem. You'll Never Walk Alone, will fill the stadium. When the lights come on, the audience will find Gerry Marsden of Gerry and The Pacemakers playing live for them. Setting the pace, at the bounces playfully on his father's knee, mischievously tugging at his shirt and punching him, gently yet provocatively, on the chin. Dad cradles him close, barely noticing. Cassius tires after 20 minutes, as four-yearolds do, and wanders off to seek alternative entertainment. Dad glances after him, sneaking a paternal glance, and carries on chatting.

Eddie Newton, the Chelsea midfield player, has faced many more learsome opponents, indulged in much more demanding duels, and come out winning. Hard but fair. When Liverpool play at Stamford Bridge tomorrow, in the fourth round of the FA Cup, he will guard his territory jealously and appear not a patch out of place amid the continental glitterati.

In the company of Cassius, he mellows, indulging his son's whims without a hint of irritation apart from a few quiet, calming words. "I make sure I'm there for him the whole time," Newton said. 'He's a bit of a daddy's boy. he tries to copy everything I do, but he's great.

Tve enjoyed watching him develop, from when he was a baby to now, and I enjoy taking him to school. I remember his first day, he wasn't sure about it and started crying. Now, I take him in and he says: Bye bye, dad' - and he's gone."

Newton Jr was named after Cassius Clay, later to become Muhammad Ali, the former world heavyweight boxing champion. "I liked the name, hero," Newton said. "I admired him for many reasons but particularly for the way he stood up for his beliefs. "The United States in the Sixties was very racist but he still went to places where black men would fear to tread. He went to universities in the deep South, where he was surrounded by hundreds of white people, and stood up and said: You are doing wrong. This is not the way God wants us to carry on. You shouldn't judge people by the colour of their skin'. "Even now, even though he's suffering from Parkinhim. He's still out there, still visiting people, still involved with charities. He's one hell of a man." Newton, 25, is cautious at help me. I'd get cramp in my

You can tackle, you've got skill on the ball, you're good in the air and you read the game well. I've got the perfect position for you the holding slot in front of the back, four. I want you to dictate, get the ball, play it, set everything up, keep it all ticking over, but never get in front of the ball. Wherever it is, I want you behind it". Newton obeyed - as Hoddle preached the patient, beautiful game — and flourished. In February last year he broke his right leg in a collision with Kevin Hitchcock, the Chelsea goalkeeper, when playing against West Ham United He reappeared three months ago, by which time Hoddle had left to coach England, Ruud Gullit was player-manager and the Italians, Vialli and Di Matteo, plus Leboeuf, the Frenchman. had arrived at the Bridge. Zola, a third Italian, soon joined them.

"I've never been worried about competition," Newton said. "I've always been fairly self-confident and believed in myself. Anyway, the camara-derie at the club is brilliant. He's kept to that, everyone knows where they stand."

Newton is doing it, consistentily. If not, he can seek satisfaction elsewhere - from the soccer schools he organises, from his love of ragga, soul and swing, from playing with his son. Or from his collection of Muhammad Ali videos.

"If I need a pick-me-up, I watch the tapes," he said. "I never get bored with them, go out and get what I want, to It was the arrival of Glenn go as far as I can, to be the loddle at Stamford Bridge, a best I can. All inspires me. He

Forest takeover

By Russell Kempson and David Maddock

ATTEMPTS to take over Nottingham Forest, the troubled FA Carling Premiership club. took another twist yesterday. The consortium led by Nigel Wray, the City financier and owner of Saracens rugby union club, is now reassessing whether it wants to continue bidding after the Forest board of directors announced a delay in holding the next emergency general meeting.

Wray's group has offered a £24 million package, on the condition that it is voted on by February 13. However, Forest have arranged the next meeting of shareholders for Febru-

Nina Gardiner, a spokeswoman for the consortium. said: "Our document expires on February 13 and we now have to decide whether we will extend the deadline for the proposals we have put forward to Forest." At the last emergency meeting, earlier this month, shareholders rejected the rescue plans put forward by Sandy Anderson, a wealthy local businessman.

Middlesbrough have appealed to the Football Association against the three-point penalty, imposed by the FA Premier League, for failing to play the league fixture against Blackburn Rovers at Ewood Park last month. At the time. Middlesbrough - now hot-tom of the FA Carling Premiership - claimed they could not field a side because 23 players were either injured. ill or suspended.

A three-man appeal board is to be set up by the FA. "It is the first time we have had to form a commission of this nature but it will be done as soon as possible," an FA spokesman said yesterday.

Middlesbrough were also fined £50,000 and ordered to pay Blackburn compensation after calling off the game, unilaterally, with barely 24 hours' notice.

Steve Gibson, the Middlesbrough chairman, described the ruling as "profoundly unjust" and said that he would be consulting the club's legal

West Ham United also have their problems. Supporters are to brandish red cards at the board of directors this afternoon, when Wrexham visit Upton Park in an FA Cup third-round replay, in an elfort to prompt it into negotiations with Michael Tabor, a multimillionaire former bookmaker and West Ham fan.

Tabor has £30 million available to finance the club but claims that he has been ignored by the board. Gary Firmager, editor of Over Land and Sea, the West Ham fanzine, said: "There is no way you cannot support Tabor when you are lying third from bottom of the table. We are not saying the board has to go, but they have to open a dialogue with Tabor."

Liverpool's visit to Stamford Bridge tomorrow promises something special in a fragmented and distinctly uninspiring FA Cup fourth round. John Barnes returns for Liverpool, the beaten finalists last season, after recovering from a hamstring strain and he has no doubts from where Chelsea's danger will emanate. T[Gian(ranco] Zola is an exceptional talent and I really don't think we've ever seen anyone like him in England before," Barnes said. "He has given Chelsea a new dimension and made them a real threat. He is his country's [Italy's] best ralent." Manchester United also welcome a fresh face for their all-Premiership contest at Old Trafford with Wimbledon, but one not nearly as experienced as Barnes, Chris Casper, son of Frank Casper, the former Burnley player, will make only his fourth full senior appearance as a central defensive replacement for the injured Ronnie Johnsen. "I will be pervous but I would think there is something seriously wrong if I wasn't," Casper, 21, said. "I was in the same youth team as the other young lads who went into the first team and it has been frustrating that I have not followed, so this game cannot come quickly enough."

Wray reconsiders | Waddle still playing to the crowd David Maddock on the former England

e has been there, done it, missed the penalty. So why is Chris Waddle, perhaps the most talented footballer of his generation, scratching a liv-ing at the foot of the Nation-wide League first division with Bradford City?

It is a question that puts him on the defensive, but that is an alien instinct and he rallies quickly. "Thirty-six is an age, not an illness. I'm still enjoying playing, and I still feel I'm doing myself justice. I feel very fit. I don't feel any different to the way I did a few years ago. I don't think this is my last season - I now feel I could play on for a couple more years."

Waddle, once of Marseilles and England, has spent the past four months in the footballing wings as his career has started to wind down, first with Falkirk, then Bradford. Centre stage beckons once more this afternoon, though, with a visit to Everton in the lourth round of the FA

It will be a brief moment, a reminder of the mesmeric, nonchalant skills that were cultivated in England and blossomed, spectacularly, in France. There is every chance that Everton will be on the receiving end of his relatively undiminished talents, and that is an uneasy prospect for an FA Carling Premiership side which has lost its last five league matches.

Waddle continues at this lower level because he enjoys playing, cannot give it up. and because no Premiership club was interested in him when he was freed by Sheffield Wed-

They were heady days. "Marseilles was the ultimate, I loved every minute there, and I am still in their hearts when I go back." He is looking forward to the visit to Goodison Park today and a chance to step back into the limelight. It is a prospect that he believes illustrates why he should not shuffle, in that trademark hunched manner, from the field forever. "Once I call it a day, I'd like to mould my own team and get them playing the way I want to." he said.

"But not yet i haven't lost any ability, and I really am enjoying playing with Bradford I do miss the Premiership - the big crowds and the big stadiums - and I am really excited at the prospect of going back for one last

"I did think last year every ground I played at would be the last time, so it is nice to be back with the big boys. I've-been thinking about it, the chance to pit myself against the likes of Ferguson and Barmby, and it's a real treat."

Sturrock has taste * of things to come

By KEVIN McCarra

SUCCESS is supposed to act as a form of steroid, making a man's nostrils flare and his muscles bulge. All of which makes St Johnstone's mood, as they prepare to meet Rangers in the third round of the Tennents Scottish Cup at Ibrox this afternoon, a little puzzling. The Perth club ought to have every reason to feel a little brash

Having lost just three matches this season, they lead the Bell's Scottish League first division by II points and promotion, usually a most clusive prize, is virtually in their possession already. Paul Sturrock, St Johnstone's manager, is swift to argue, though, that even great progress can carry most Scottish teams only so far.
I believe Celtic and Rangers will win the league for ever more," he said, recognising the overwhelming wealth of the Old Firm, in a week that has seen the Ibrox club raise E40 million of fresh investment from Joe Lewis, the Bahamas-based businessman. One would not guess, either, that he is filled with hope over a single meeting with Rangers today.

This will be a taste of what we can experience if we get promoted, but a visit to Ibrox might not be the kind of taste you want too often." Sturrock said. The difficulties to be faced there are, indeed, substantial and, with Brian Laudrup suffering with injury and flu. Rangers will probably be able to rest him and allow Sebastian Rozental, their new £4 million signing, to start his first match for the club.

Sturrock talks, too, of the difficulty of devising a strategy for this sie. His side cannot take too many risks, since Rangers are most effective as a counter-attacking team, but the St Johnstone manager also appreciates that the Scottish Cup holders are equipped, if need be, to wear down defen-sive opposients through a pro-

merely to deliver an unconditional surrender. He may describe his record in cup football as player and manager as "abysmai", but the deprecation of himself and his side is delivered for tactical

His players are being reminded that promotion is their principal task and Sturrock is also attempting to relieve them of the inherent stress of a match against Rangers at Ibrox. Since St Johnstone are evidently too strong for the first division, it must be assumed that there is a chance of an interesting contest, as long as the loss of an early goal is avoided.

Sturrock still does not know whether his full backs. John McQuillan and Callum Davidson, will be fit to take part. No matter who is involved, however, Ibrox is not really likely to witness the removal of a premier division club from the Scottish Cup. Those with a ghoulish relish of the sight of the mighty in distress will look elsewhere. They may well congregate at Firtill, where Motherwell face Partick Thistle, a side whose form, if fittui, still suggests that they can whip up a rousing contest. Mundo MacLeod, the Partick manage er, was wary, though, of the threat posed by the Mother-well strike force. Of the other premier division representatives. Raith Rovers face the greatest hazards, but they do not visit Airdrie, at Broadwood, autil Monday. Celtic's match with Clydebank to be played at Firtuil, goes ahead tomorres and Paolo di Canio may be fit to add to the obvious difficulfolly to assume that Sturrock ties faced by the troubled first le glitteral

Frustrated Davis lets silence do his talking

By PHIL YATES

STEVE DAVIS, for so long the most quotable player in the game, gave monosyllabic responses to media questions after being beaten 5-4 by Mark King in the first round of the Regal Welsh Open at Newport vesterday.

Defeat in itself has never prevented Davis from being anything other than co-operative. One can only assume his series of "Yes" or "No" answers stemmed from a deepseated frustration at the manner in which he was eliminated from the first ranking tournament of the year. Davis, six times the world champion yet without a title since his success in this tournament in 1995 and down to No 10 in the world rankings, was 3-1 ahead then 4-3 down. He had levelled at 4-4 and led 53-0 in the deciding frame when he missed an elementary black off its spot with the winning post looming.

King, the world No.39, edged back into the reckoning before he slammed in a difficult brown from distance to initiate the clearance to black that secured a meeting with Andy Hicks or Michael Judge in the second round.

"I've practised with Steve a lot and he has given me some right good hidings." King, who, like Davis, hails from Romford, said, "Maybe that's why me beating him has hurt a bit. It is probably my best ever win because it is still quite feat to get the better of

In an equally tense finish, Fergal O'Brien, of Dublin, not the most fluent player on the circuit, abandoned the ultramethodical approach for which he is renowned to transform a 4-0 deficit into a 5-4 victory over Martin Clark. O'Brien accumulated only 40 points in the first four frames but, having arrived at the inescapable conclusion that he had nothing to lose, constructed his recovery around breaks of 84, 57, 62, 95 and 55. Even so, O'Brien's rearguard action was almost rendered academic. Clark, handicapped by neck pains, ebrae hauled his way back into the deciding frame only to leave a straightforward pink in the jaws of a pocket with the black ideally situated.

Below-par Daly takes the money and runs

By JOHN HOPKINS

IS John Daly really worth it? Can the thousands of dollars the sponsors spent on luring him to Hope Island in Queensland, and the similar king's ransom no doubt need-ed to persuade him to fly across Australia to Perth to compete in the Heineken Classic next week, be considered money well spent?

The question is asked because of Daly's apparent inability to try in some tournaments. A seven-over-par 79 in the second round of the Johnnie Walker Classic vesterday, when added to his first-round 77, meant that he missed the halfway cut by ten strokes. This is not the scoring of a man intent upon the task in hand, but of one who has

In the United States, there was once a pattern to Daly's play. If he did not start well, his subsequent rounds became noticeably worse; if he could not win, he could not be bothered. This did not endear him to his peers, because they felt he was letting them down by implication.

He does not seem to have rid himself of this habit. His two rounds in Australia totalled 12 over par and only four of the 155-strong field scored worse than the 1995 Open champion.

Daly generates a lot of publicity wherever he plays but appears to overlook the obligation that is placed upon someone receiving a lot of money, whether it is described as a sponsorship fee or "turn-up money", as Sandy Lyle once called it.

This obligation is that he should behave like a true professional and do his best to give a decent return on this money. When Greg Norman failed to qualify for the last two rounds of a tournament in Switzerland, he returned half his appearance fee. Will Daly do the same?

Vijay Singh, Wayne Grady, the 1990 US PGA champion. and Peter Senior all missed the cut yesterday, all recording far worse scores in the second round than the first. Singh went from a 71 to a 79 Grady a 73 to a 76. Senior a 69 to a 78. However, good scoring was possible, even on a windy day, as Alexander Cejka, of Germany, demonstrated - his 67 equalled the course record. He is on 140, four strokes behind the leader. Britain frozen out of final

FROM JOHN HENNESSY IN PARIS

THE women's short programme of the European figure skating championships, as so often in the past, proved to be a graveyard of British hopes here at the Bercy Stadium yesterday. Among those who failed was Jenna Arrowsmith, the national champion, which means that, for the third year running, Britain has no domestic interest in the final this afternoon.

Only 24 skaters are allowed to go through and Arrowsmith was spared last place in a field of 30 by a Norwegian. The same fate befell Arrowsmith two years ago, but at least she was then only a callow 14-year-old. Stephanie Main was the culprit last year. It is no surprise to find Irina

Slutskaya, the young Russian, leading the parade. Only a year older than Arrowsmith,

Unlike her two compatriots, who had finished ahead of her in their national championship, Slutskaya kept her nerve yesterday. Perhaps there should be more of a running edge on her jumps, but the triple lutz in combination with a double toe loop and the triple

Gourlay announces case for the defence

IN YEARS gone by, holders of the world indoor singles championship have found that defending the title is a very different proposition to winning it in the first place and have, on occasion, bowed out in the first round of the following year's event (David Rhys Jones writes). Yesterday, however, in easing to a fourset defeat of Jeff Rabkin, of Israel, at the Preston Guild Hall, David Gourlay Jr shrugged off that pressure with a nonchalance that suggests he can retain his crown. Gourlay, at 30 a product of Scotland's most illustrious bowling family, emphasised that he is a genuine contender for the SAGA world indoor title with an impressive display. The Prestwick player's relentless drawing to the jack and delicately-weighted deliveries soon took him into a two-set lead and, although the wheels came off in the third set, which Rabkin won 7-3.

Gourlay regained control. Bidding to become the fourth man to win the title two years running, he wrapped up his win with the help of one gentle take-out in the fourth set, when he nudged a Rabkin front-toucher sideways a matter of a mere six inches to claim a treble, that was the stuff of dreams - or, in Rabkin's case, nightmares.

"They told me before I came here that David was good," Rabkin said afterwards. "He was too good for me."

Sproat names lottery winner

By DAVID MILLER

THE new UK Sports Council is to become a distributor of National Lottery funds - the constitutional change that Lord MacLaurin, its chairman, has declared to be basic to its successful function. The necessity was underlined two weeks ago at the first open conference of the UKSC. Jain Sproat, the minister for sport, has responded swiftly. The change will be introduced as quickly as possible," he said yesterday, "This was my original intention to be a funding body but there was opposition."

The news will be welcomed by MacLaurin because the power that goes hand in hand with money will facilitate the UKSC's closer collaboration in the creation of the new Academy for Sport. Opposition to the body's lottery-distributor status came, I understand, from Sir Rodney Walker and Derek Casey, the respective chairman and director of the former Great Britain Sports Council, now the England Sports Council. They sensed that their own influence would be reduced. This will indeed be so, but it is an unavoidable aspect of the long-overdue rationalisation and centralisation of British sports administration.

Bowlers regroup after wayward start

generously averted their gaze

from the vulnerability.

The waywardness of the attack had an unfortunate outcome when Alec Stewart.

damaged the little finger of his

complete the day's work after treatment but was said to be

"sore", though it was unclear whether this referred to his injury or his view of the bowling. Dominic Cork, completing a remarkable recovery from a tour-threatening back injury, asked more questions of the batsmen than anyone but,

ironically, it was the errant

Mullally who made the breach, 20 minutes into the second session. Young, per-haps surprised by an inswinger on line, played all hander, Stephen Fleming.

IF EVER there was a day for Michael Atherton to crave the benefit of hindsight, this was it. Had he known in advance that the Eden Park pitch would bear little malice and that his bowlers would carry no threat, Atherton would not have put New Zealand in to bat and England might not have made such an unpromising start to a first Test they must win to protect their captain's position.

By taking three redeeming wickets in the evening session, England closed the opening day in a negotiable position. But if all was far from lost, the abiding impression was that England ought to have done much better with the ball and might have done better still with the bat.

The logic behind Atherton's decision to bowl was difficult to dispute. It had been a cloudy morning after overnight rain, the pitch was damp and educated opinion insisted it would be at its most helpful in the first session of the game. Lee Germon, the New Zealand captain, said he too would have bowled, given the chance.

But the appearance of a pitch can be as deceptive as the form of a bowling attack and England were betrayed by both. New Zealand reached lunch without losing a wicket, a triumph in the circumstances, and despite their losses as the bowlers belatedly remembered that the object is make batsmen play a shot, this was not a day for England to recall with oride.

"It was a good toss to win. we chose the right option and didn't take advantage of it." David Lloyd, the coach, said. it's difficult to think that these were the same bowlers who had done so well in the matches prior to this Test.

They bowled poorly in an important first session and they are aware of it."

Intriguingly. Lloyd stayed away from the dressing-room at lunchtime. "I left them to it," he said, indicating, perhaps, that his notorious temper was so inflamed that he did not trust himself to speak. Atherton was left to address his bowlers and flattery will not have formed part of the Even allowing for the depressing fact that England seldom put two successive balls in the right area, this was not a spiteful pitch. Blair

he made a dedicated 70, much his highest Test score, and he said later: "The pitch didn't do as much as we leared it might. They probably didn't use the conditions as well as they could have done, either."

ment. The Kookaburra ball swung lavishly in the first hour and Alan Mullally, in particular, bowled with a complete absence of elementary control. Ball after ball swung harmlessly down the leg side, allowing the batsmen to bed down without alarms or serious examination.

THE rugby union career of lonah Lomu, who buildozed his way to fame in the 1995 World Cup, may be over at the age of 21. Lornu, the New Zealand wing, yesterday an-nounced that he would be unable to play for the next six months because he is suffering from a kidney disorder. Doctors have given him only a 50-50 chance of making a full recovery.

Lornu, the outstanding player of the 1995 global tournament in South Africa with his 6ft 5in, 18-stone physique, first had the problem diagnosed two years ago and he has been taking antibiotics in an effort to control it.

Speaking in Auckland yes-terday, Lomu said: "I feel very positive about the treatment. I have got the best doctors on the case and I never lie down and let anything trample over me. This is just a hiccup.

"It is a chance I have to take and it is better than doing nothing about it. I would rather miss out six months than miss out on a whole lifetime of living, really."

Lomu, who was born in Auckland of Tongan parents, and of whom Will Carling said after England's 45-29 defeat in the World Cup semifinal, "he is awesome, a freak - I wish he would go away", is suffering from a disease

drome_ John Maybew, the New Zealand doctor, said: "The characteristics of this disease, caused by chronic kidney damage, is that he is suffering from low body protein in his blood.

"He is more susceptible to infection and he gets into trouble with swelling, especially after long flights. For the past 18 months, he has been dragging a cart around, meta-phorically. How he has managed to train and play I am not sure. We have been monitoring his condition and it has deteriorated markedly in that period of time."

He added that Lornu was now taking "heavy-duty" drug therapy and this meant that he would not pass drug tests. Lomu may have been prescribed cortico-steroids and possibly diuretics, both of which would contravene the drug regulations of the International Olympic Committee (IOC).

Although Australia lead the best-of-five-series 2-1 and need only a draw to retain the Frank Worrell trophy. Mark Taylor, the captain, said vesterday that he did not plan to go on the defensive.

Taylor said history showed that almost all the recent Tests between the two sides had ended with a result, and that Australia were likely to name two fast bowlers, two spinners and six specialist batsmen-"If we play Bevo [Bevan] at tive option," Taylor said. "It will be purely because we want to play two spinners in tandem with two quicks. To think about going into a Test match and playing for a draw with seven batsmen would be a very dangerous option. So far this series, we've had three Tests and three results."

Australia, who ended West Indies' 15-year unbeaten record in 1995, began the series in commanding style with convincing wins in Brisbane and Sydney, but a resurgent Curtly Ambrose, the West Indies fast bowler, exploded into action in the third Test in Melbourne and West Indies won inside three days.

SATURDAY JANUARY 25 1997

The dream that died

y generation, fell for America, -1 was born in 1939 and from the start America was Dreamland. The town in which I grew up in the 1940s — Wigton, in Cumber-land (pop. 5,000) — was en-closed, church-bidden, rationbooked, all but car-less, a cat's cradle of families and alley ways, still in a hangover of 1920s depression and stuffed with Victorian values. Whatever its own, true deep dreams, which may in the end be suonger than those of Hollywood, it was a planet away from the new worlds flickering twice nightly at the Palace Cinema in Meeting House Lane

America has been Europe's Promised Land, and its escape route for centuries. About 200 years ago, a few miles from Wigton, in Grasmere, Words-worth and Coleridge would discuss the virgin possibilities of America, in which Coleridge had once planned to settle an ideal commune. From the bitter agricultural areas of Cumbria and the mines off its west coast, working people and their families, including members of my own, had taken up all they had SHOPPING 23 GARDENING 46 PROPERTY 7-16 COUNTRY LIFE 11 HOME LIFE.

In the case of my generation, however, America seemed to be invading us. Their arrival as saviours and as the new Imperialists in the First World War had given an infimation of it. But it was Charlie Chaplin and America's determined and brilliant trade policy of using the movies to sell the States which really did the business.

What I experienced as a boy in Wigton was our former colony making a counter strike for the most powerful colony of all: the imagination.

It began for young males with the cowboy films. The heroes were ordinary people, and all they needed was a horse, a gun and a just cause. The cowboy identification was helped in Wigton by the ancient presence of horses which far outnumbered cars. But it was the free simplicity of the men Since boyhood Melvyn Bragg has been in love with America, but today he finds its culture infantile and violent. Here he describes the end of the affair which sent us all galloping down the streets with a hitchkick, slapping our rumps to urge on the steed while nimbly holding the reins in the left hand, clicking tongue against palate to imitate the clopping of the hooves. The primary message of America was etched early and etched deep - one free (American) man of righteousness, alone against a world or a wilderness, would and did overcome. A little later for me came the musicals. In Wigton at that time many of us whistled tunes as we went up and down the streets, and there was singing in the pubs and in the streets again when the girls linked arms and walked up from the nd the seduction through the movies continued, even with the gangster films the nearest we got to American realism, although we did not realise that at the time. We imitated the accent, we chewed the gum, we smoked like They smoked. The American invasion was under way.

Our next stage, adolescence, was lit up by rock 'n' roll, and the invention of the teenager. American popular music had been lapped up by the British clothing factory. But the musicals metamorphosed our council black in the council black in th blues in my case. But Elvis Presley was the great detonator, the white boy with the voice of the sorcerer who brought black music and movement and sex to the millions of young people who longed to be part of that sound and its sensuality.

Music pierces defences unlike any other art; it is like passion itself, and the longing to hear the rock n'roll anthems became a fever.

There is a café still in Wigton, The Spotted Cow, run then by my best friend's father, and one day a juke box arrived. It was as if a space ship had landed up the Amazon. If you went in after hours and used tokens (as we did on the very first night) you could play Elvis Presley again and again and again at full blast until it hit the nerve centre like a fix. Wigton's first rock band was formed - the Memphis Five. And my hair was trained and greased into the full Elvis Hokusai fullfrontal wave.

So the teenager arrived in Cumberland with the new hairstyles and the jeans and the claims to belong to a class of its own outside our closed class system. James Dean stamped that home on the screen in Rebel Without a Cause - the epitaph of that time.

Dean came out of Holden Caulfield, and Huck Finn in a progression which marked another strand in the American takeover of the 1940s and 1950s. My generation found their own lives often more accurately mirrored in American fiction

Then George Bush be-came President of the United States he told the world that now he was the most powerful man in the world, no one could make him eat broccoli any more. His remarks opened up that dark heart of every politician who is driven to power by some terrible childhood loathing. Was John Major so scarred by his postwar experience of brawn that he had to climb all the way to No 10 to get away from it? Perhaps President Clinton could have livened up his tedious inaugural address with the thought, "My fellow Americans, let us build a bridge so that we can go half way and drop pop tarts

For me, true power would mean the option never to have to eat imported tropical fruits. Pawpaws and plantains litter supermarket fruit stalls and restaurant pudding lists, along with passion fruits and pomegranates. Yet buy one and, without fail, it will be either overripe or hard as a rhino's corn. If a shop sold a tin of mouldy cornflakes, recompense would be swift and complete. Sell a sour tangerine or a ropey, supposedly honeydew melon and it's caveat

Supermarket fruit stalls are like those craft shops which sell tatty Indian artefacts for £100 that go for 10p on the streets of Delhi. So thrilled are we meant to be at the exotic range on offer that the quality becomes immaterial.

Take the avocado pear. A soft West Indian fruit in origin, it was meant to be knocked lazily off its tree and chewed out of its skin. The stone could then be kicked insouciantly down the street. Since it found its way on to salad plates, under cover of dressings and mayonnaise, however, it has become as leathery as the faces of the health nuts who obsess about it. Go to the avocado section at a fruit stall and you find people squeezing the pears as a sinister plastic surgeon might handle a silicon breast.

The mango, a fleshy, juicy delicious fruit from the East Indies, like all fruits, has its season. Not that this seems to bother the restaurants which offer it in stringy, odourless chunks cut on the skin that have to be tugged off with an aggressive elbow action. When all those poets wrote about fruit, equating it with love, fertility and downright sex, the tough. green imported mango was not what they had in mind.

BY PHILIP DELVES BROUGHTON

Peaches, apples, melons, bananas, even plums and the odd coconut are all rich in sexual innuendo. Had you taken the author of the Song of Solomon to the average British supermarket fruit stall before he settled down with his sherbert and scribe, however, he would have to have done some serious reworking on

It is still possible to find a decent tropical fruit. apple when required, thanks to the miracles of crop spraying. Anyone who disagrees with modern intensive fruit-farming methods should try an organic apple. Not one fallen from Granny's apple free full of the taste of childhood, innocence and first kisses, rather the sort sold in organic food shops. dark, muddy and tasting like foor fungus. Laughably expensive, too. But then, there is a justice in the fact that that pinched, agitated look reserved for organic foodies should come at such a steep price. Much underestimated in the hurricane of tough new fruits is the art of tinning. As puddings go, even the most extravagant fruit salad would be pushed to rival the tinned peach, adorned with a cowlick of cream. Tinned lychees are a good example of what can usefully be done with a more

A lychee, bought in its lizardish skin then gnawed out from round. its stone, is a bitter-sweet experience. Stone it, skin it and tin it in its own juice, serve it up with vanilla ice-cream even, and you have something fit for the gods.

For the most part, however, shops continue to bombard uswith their poor, expensive versions of the real thing. The more exotic the fruit, the healthier one is led to imagine it must be, the more one is supposed to pay for it. Yet the star fruit was meant to be eaten in situ in South-East Asia, not imported and sliced on to octagonal black plates in over-ambitious English restaurants. Guava, kiwi and sharon fruits are a menace, winking from their shelves with the promise of sweet pleasures and tropical musk, when all they do is fleece their buyers before revealing tired old flesh beneath their exotic

For those fruit fascists who insist that grisly plantain or rubbery pawpaw are the only guarantees of a permanent state of hydro-colonic apermanent state of hydro-co bliss, there are some very reasonable package trips to the Caribbean and Far East. They cost no more than a few trips to the organic food shop, the fruit might be ripe, and the rest of us can get stuck into a custard-smothered rhubarb crumble. ● Giles Coren is away the Village - all black, no sweat it seemed, no problem. I helicoptered between the skyscrapers feeling like Dan Dare - part of the future. I went to Bloomingdales with a wad and nearly sickened myself trying to spend it all on presents to be shipped back home as if I had become part of Marshall Aid. Bookshops were open up to midnight and, after that, you could go to a bar and get a beer. Closing time in England then — 10pm. This was indeed the Promised Land. Of course, I was in a very privileged position. Harry Salzman had liked the Debussy television script I had done for Ken Russell and took me on to write screenplays. I saw none of the destitution. I did not go to the South. My trip took me nowhere near the grind of the industrial north and yet I would contend that my first experience was not unlike others of my generation and their first trip to the land which had so successfully pitched for their young imaginations.

That legitimises my euphoria in retrospect is that America was then the place where so many liberating ideas and liberating movements were taking off - in race with Martin Luther King, in young politics it seemed with JFK. Scholars, scientists. artists of all kinds were pulled across the Atlantic by the centrifugal force of the new order, new world. It sang the Freedom song and the times were a-changing.

But when finally I got to Hollywood. 7,000 miles from Joe's picture house in Wigton, I lasted only a few weeks. The offer of a scriptwriting contract did not appeal. Perhaps I was homesick; perhaps I was daunted by it all. My more heroic explanation to myself was that I hated the authoritarian set up. The screenplay was first stop in the movie business, but the writer paid for this pole position by being trampled on by everyone at all times. Butthat was my fault, I thought, not the fault of America, which fulfilled all its childhood promises until it hit the buffers in Vietnam in that same decade. Another America, an uglier, more destructive America emerged. It had been there all the time, I am sure, but well overlaid by America's world view of itself promoted through the cinema. And, although it was a tribute to America that the students and was the first American poem.

Yet throughout the 1970s, as Britain reeled from loss of Empire, loss of direction, loss of control in so many areas of life, the lure of the dollar and the land of opportunities still drew us. And there was a sense in which my generation could not yet really blame America - however much we railed against Cambodia, napalm. South American dictatorships and marched on Grosvenor Square: we had taken on America's wounds as tenderly as its aspirations. But when in the 1980s we were lectured through the movies and through the new triumphalist commentators that "greed was good" and "greed is everything", it was time to say "that's not us". Greed replaced public service as the ethos. The very words "public service" became a despised aside.

It was in that time that the traditions and virtues of Britzin, coming out of its dark, post-imperial night of the soul, reasserted themselves.

There is still great decency here and a tolerance above that of America. I think, and of most other countries. The racial divisions in Britain, for instance, are and next Sunday at 10,45pm.

chasmic and perilous. Those who know both countries say that we are the truer melting pot now. Continuities, although parodied by the smear of "theme park", matter to enough British people to stabilise society and reach back into what so many have struggled for.

America injected us with the urgency of the present. But now in New York there is not the layered and rather subversive feeling of richness I feel in London, a feeling with which I am so familiar that it ought to have dulled. It has not. New York has: The same tired, monstrous sandwiches are served in the same delicatessen in the same abrasive manner, but the zip has gone. Our own energies - confused, crushed and chastened over the last half century - are reasserting themselves, and the force is here.

I think this country is remarkable in having survived this century in such good shape. After two murderous world wars, a massive loss of wealth and life, the end of Empire, a haemorrhaging of talent, a near implosion of industry, Britain ought, were it a human being, to be in intensive care, instead, we are stronger than ever in many ways and the strengths come from our traditions. Our best future is not in following America's present but building on the best of our past.

I suspect that my experience of America is very like that of many of my generation — and held by those in power today instead of the American metrinogratic dream, we have been saddled with the suspect American corporate ethic.

Let me end where I began: with the movies. World mass-market movies are all American, partly because American trade agreements insist on favourable deals, country by country. In recent years: brilliant and thrilling though some of them are - they have shown a society whose values are violent, infamile and nihilistic. There is nothing there to nourish the dreams of a Colendge looking for a paradise on earth or a working man in Wigton looking for a new better beginning it seems increasingly a foreign place well worth knowing and trading with and enjoying, but no longer either the dream that draws us there or the spell that comes back to bind us. Perhaps in a quiet way, it is time for us to make our own Declaration of Independence.

Argyle, originally taken from the Argyle clan tartan, with its multicoloured diamond pattern, is widely seen on mass-produced socks, scarves and sweaters. It has been stylised with different colourways over the years to become one of the most familiar and best used basic designs. From Vivienne Westwood to Pringle, its appeal can reach the stylish middle-aged golfer and the fashion victim alike. Tartans and plaids are always

Where boots are made for walking

OPEN THIS WEEKEND

■ Wimpole Hall, Arrington, near Royston, Hertfordshire (01223 207257).

Ten miles southwest of Cambridge on the A603, eight miles north of Royston on the A14. Open Wed, Sat, Sun 10am-4pm. E2, children free. The park and woodland are open daily at no charge.

Wimpole is a repository of gardening history, dating from the 17th century when the great house was built for Sir Thomas Chicheley, before being enlarged and embellished for successive owners by leading architects including Gibbs. Flitcroft and Soane.

The sense of expansive landscape at this time of year can be overwhelming, and it was this enormous scale which inspired some of Wimpole's most impressive garden and landscape features, such as the magnificent twoand-a-quarter mile south avenue, originally planted with elms by Charles Bridgeman. These were replaced with limes (grown from grafts of trees planted in the park by Bridgeman) by the National Trust in the 1980s after Dutch elm disease had killed the originals.

Bridgeman's north avenue was naturalised into clumps by Capability Brown, whose alterations included building the sham castle folly, originally designed by Sanderson Miller.

Visitors are advised to allow themselves a couple of hours - and to wear comfortable walking boots - to explore the entrancing series of walks through park and woodland and to appreciate the work by the NT to preserve and restore this outstanding landscape.

■ Brobury House Gardens, Brobury, Herefordshire (0198! 500229).

About 11 miles west of Hereford. off the A438 at Bredwardine Bridge. Open all year Mon-Sat, 9am-4pm (winter). £2, children £1.

Overlooking the Wye valley. Brobury enjoys a superb setting and looks across the river to the vicarage of Bredwardine, occupied for some years by the diarist Francis Kilvert. Much of the garden dates from the Victorian period, when the house was built, and there are fine trees, such as the trio of cedars that dominate the lawn to one side. As well as formal terraces and pools, including a canal with a statue of Neptune at one end, there are interesting younger trees, planted by the present owners, among which white-barked birches are particularly striking at this time of year. Most interesting among the trees, however, is a venerable oak that pre-dates the house by centuries, just one of the many discoveries here.

Heligan, Pentewan, St Austell, Cornwall (01726 844157).

Take the B3273 to Mevagissey from St Austell. Open daily all year, 10am-4.30pm (last tickets in winter 3.30pm). E3.40, children E2, concessions E2.90.

Heligan has acquired such a reputation since its restoration was begun in 1991 that a visit during winter can be particularly rewarding for the relative peace compared to a busy summer day. Also at this time of year, the scale of the garden - which extends to nearly 60 acres and was decaying quietly for a century until the restoration began - can be best appreciated. The restored Georgian walled gardens and fascinating range of buildings, such as the banana and peach houses and melon pit, are shown off without the summer decoration of plants and, similarly, the selection of magnificent rare conifers are presented in the most striking fashion when the surrounding trees are without leaf. For many visitors it is the energy of the restoration work, combining with the individual features of this garden of historic importance and the exciting atmosphere of nature contained but not controlled, that leaves the most lasting impression.

If the trimks are clean and straight, they make a stylish, formal feature marching along the wall, but if they are squeezed against the wall they look uncomfortable. At lit from the wall the tendencies of the trunks to be drawn away to the light and buffered forward by wind are also more easily avoided.

How wide apart you set them is a matter of choice. About 18in-24in is normal for a beech hedge, but bare trunks at this proximity look rather manic. About 3ft-6ft is suitable for a nursery and made the energy to put stilted hedge, although it will take a on height there. Give it perhaps a

Only a clean, straight trunk is needed at low level, and the urgency is to get the plants up to the foliage level so that they can start to do their job of making a screen. Strong galvanised wires are then run across the posts, at 18in-24in height intervals, to which the developing side branches can be tied. For a more firm effect, tie long bamboo canes to the wires and attach the branches to these.

This structure may not seem the sort of thing you want in a garden, but it is surprising how soon it becomes hidden in foliage. And after a few years, the wires and posts can be removed and just the canes left in place. If an even lighter screen is branches every year, leaving a clean, formal skeleton.

Lime twigs are malleable and well suited to training. They can even be trained into archways and tunnels, and the best to use are the common time (T. europaea) or T.

STEPHEN ANDERTON replies to readers' letters

Where can I find the 'Madame Speaker' rose? Our garden centre has not heard of it, and another said sales were restricted because it is a new rose. — Rev C. Earle.

Ware, Hertfordshire.

There are two main sources for anyone having trouble finding a rose variety. One is the Royal National Rose Social National Coron St Alety, Chiswell Green, St Albans. Hertfordshire AL2 3NR (01727 850461). The other is a booklet called Find That Rose, produced yearly by the British Rose Growers' Association and available from the RNRS for £2.50, including p&p. 'Madame Speaker' hybrid tea rose, dark red and bordered with cream and vellow - is indeed new and will be available at B&O from this autumn.

Last August I excavated the sediment from a large garden pond and spread it over a wide area. It has dried out well. is friable. 2ft-3ft deep in places, and has a pH of between 6.5 and 7. it is surrounded and shaded by oaks. I would like to plant the area with rhododendrons and azaleas, but I am unsure when the sediment will be ready for planting. — FJ. Pervin. High Halden. Kent.

A Plant in March. Rho-dodendrons and azaleas will love that acid or neutral soil. Dredged silt from ponds with trees nearby usually has enough leaf and twig material in it to produce a coarse, open textured soil, despite the fine particles of the silt proper. By March the silt will have had ample chance to settle. Check the plants in autumn to see if irregular settlement has left them either too high or too low in the soil and adjust accordingly. Is the land under the silt area acidic? If not, worm action may bring alkaline soil up into the silt and raise the pH until it becomes unsuitable for rhododendrons. But that is many years away.

Apparently the moles dislike either the smell or blundering into the sharp spikes on the seeds. I cannot help wondering if, on the contrary, they like the smell and ear these poisonous seeds. Anyone wishing to try this will find that, in the south at least, you can grow the flower seed of Ricinus communis, the castor oil plant, a tender shrub widely used as a bedding plant.

Having reduced by two-thirds a robust Lavatera 'Barnsley'. I read with horror that they revert to the common pink when pruned severely. Is this always the case? I had planned to move it this winter and wonder if it is now worth doing? - K. Argnovic, London W4.

A Lavateras are prolific flowering shrubs but must be pruned or they get straggly. With or without pruning they are not long lived, up to five to six years. Snow, or cold usually finish them off. The common Lavatera olbia is insistently purplish pink, and 'Barnsley (now thought to be a hybrid) was one of the first of the many softer-coloured variations. It tends to revert, with or without heavy pruning, though the problem is sometimes more common after heavy pruning. So wait and see, and take some cuttings next summer anyway, of a true branch, to keep you going. As a gener-al rule, it is better to leave the hard-pruning of sappy. short-lived shrubs until lat-

A These succulent plants come from dry conditions where water is scarce. So they store their own in the leaves and can survive long periods without water. It is safer for a species to rely on leaf knocked off by a passing animal taking root than to wait for seed and rain to coincide.

These guns are ideal for burning off seedling weeds where there are no other plants nearby which might be damaged by the heat. A blast of flame is delivered from the end of a handheld lance and, if it is used while the weeds are still seedlings, a complete kill is achieved.

Flame guns can also be used on gravel paths and drives as an alternative to residual weedkillers. Now that several such weedkillers previously used have been banned, many local authorities are turning to flame and steam to control weeds on public areas and pavements.

For domestic use, there are two kinds of flame guns: the old-fashioned but splendidly powerful paraffin type, and the cleaner, easier, gas-powered type.

The paraffin type has been around for generations and works rather like a big blowlamp on a long handle. Paraffin is delivered under pressure to a nozzle and is first vapourised by

Sales staff can also prompt the system to select floor coverings which lit your requirements: for example, green bedroom carpet with a small pattern. In all cases, the image you see includes texture? and shadow effects. You can also change the lighting conditions to match those in your home.

If you want to take the process a step further you can have photographs of your rooms installed on he computer system. You can then view the carpets in their "real" setting. This - service from Homevision costs 175, refunded if you buy a floor covering.

HomeVision was launched last August in Guildford, Surrey, and is installed in 12 stores in the south-east of England. Allied Carpets is planning to go national with the

You are also likely to see similar systems in DIY stores by the end of the year, systems which allow you to paint the walls or hang wallpaper on screen. Interactive Colour Solutions, which developed the HomeVision system, is working with various manufacturers to a range of home settings.

DIY chains, including Home-base, B&Q, Do It All and Fads, were involved in computer trials for most of last year and are now evaluating the results. Depending on their verdict, Wallpaper Wizard could eventually be installed in up to 300 DIY stores, says John Lawrence, the new-business manager at Crown Wallcoverings.

s well as dealing with walls and floors, photoquality computer images are being used by retailers to show how fitted furniture will look when it is in place. A photorealism system called Planit, developed by ICADS, can be used to design kitchens, bedrooms, bathrooms, living rooms and conservatories. About 1,000 copies of the system have been installed by independent retailers, chiefly as an aid to kitchen design. It is also used by leading retail by leading retail groups, such as Ikea, John Lewis, Wickes and MFI.

Planit can design a kirchen within minutes, using the retailer's stocked range of units. The initial drawings are of draft quality, which allows the system to work fast - changing selections at the click of a button. Planit will also add up the cost of the furniture and produce an itemised quote. And, once you're happy with the draft picture and price, the system will

Of course, photo-quality images, although impressive, are simply a fast, effective advancement on the artist's impression". They're useful but, in terms of three-dimensional design, it is virtual reality that is at the cutting edge of computer-aided planning, because it allows you to "walk through" a room and to get a feel for how the whole thing works.

"This is important in kitchen design, where the relative positioning of units and appliances is the key." says Mike Hardman, of ICADS, who has been involved in developing a virtual-reality kitchen and bathroom design package. The system lets you "explore" a room. viewing it from any angle, opening cupboards, even lighting the oven or filling the bath. The image is of draft quality but ICADS expects to launch an improved version later this year.

Computer virtual reality has also been developed by the specialist software company M'n'G Designs. which has just launched an addition to its existing Superfast Plus programme - a design package used by more than 1,000 high street stores and kitchen suppliers throughout Britain. Using draftquality images, the programme allows the viewer to interact with the design. "Virtual reality lets you see what the designer has in mind." says Maurice Green, the managing director of M'n'G Designs. For example, you can open drawers and doors to make sure nothing in the house clashes." As for the future, virtual reality and photo-realism are likely to gain popularity, and the trend won't stop with interior design. In America, retailers already use computer

Countrymen, lend me your house

Renting rural properties is one of the fastest-growing sectors of the

he whole property market seems to be putting its green wellies on. It's only January but already country rentals have emerged as one of the fastest growing sectors of the housing market.

housing market

Penny Parr-Head of Hamptons International estimates that the rural rental market is experiencing a boom greater than that of the London equivalent.

The main reason is that the number of people looking to rent doubled between 1995 and 1996, while the number of new properties coming onto the market fell by 28 per cent.
Children are usually one of the biggest factors in enticing people out of the cities. Many would-be rural renters feel that the country provides access to better schools as well as more space and a better quality of life for their young ones.

Barbara Blanchard, of John D. Wood's country rental department, confirms this.

D. Wood's country rental department, confirms this.

"Typical clients looking for a country rental are a young professional couple with children," she says. "They have done the whole London thing and have decided that it is time to move to the country."

For Mark and Julia Shirley.

For Mark and Julia Shirley. who have three children — Max, six, Amelia, three, and Milo, one — this was instrumental in their decision to sell their house in Balham, south London and move to a five-bedroom house on an estate near Winchester.

Mr Shirley says: "Now we can let the children play outside and we know that they will be safe — that's something we would never have dreamt of doing in London."

However. Mr Shirley was quick to discover the most obvious disadvantage of moving to the country. Facing a 90-minute journey morning and evening to his job in the City, he admits: "In the summer it is fine, but in the winter it can be dreadful. I leave at 6.30am and get home at 7.30pm. It is dark when I set off and dark when I get home."

The Shirleys decided to rent in the country as a stop-gap while looking for the right house to buy, and they are not alone. Hamptons estimates that 36 per cent of its applicants have turned to the rental market as a temporary alternative to buying.

For those looking to buy outside the capital, prices are expected to rise by 10 per cent in 1997. This prediction comes from Simon Agace, the chairman of the London agent Winkworth, the only property expert to accurately predict the

Now is the time to switch to the very latest energy-saving light bulbs and watch your electricity bills

Consuming up to 80% less energy than conventional bulbs, an 11 watt 'energy-saver' gives around 60 watts of light, whilst a 15 watt roughly equates to a 75 watt, and a 20 watt to a 100 watt conventional bulb.

The lack of good properties seems to be the main reason. Strutt & Parker in Lewes has more than 1.000 prospective purchasers competing for ten houses in the £250.000 range. Naturally, the few houses available are selling for sums well above the guide price.

ut the buying market in the country is also limited because often the most desirable rural properties — farmhouses, stables and old staff cottages — are on country estates. Landowners are reluctant to sell these properties, preferring to rent them instead, so keeping their estates in one piece.

the result is an enormous strain on the available rental property. Inevitably we will see more rent increases, frustrated applicants, gazumping and landlords becoming evermore choosy about who they staff form the only other major part of the country rentals market, making up 32 per cent of all applicants. Companies have finally realised the advantages of locating their staff outside the big cities, hoping that the quality of life in the country will produce better results from executives.

Nor are companies entirely blind to the comparatively lower costs of country lets Children when compared to equivalent properare a big ties in London. For example. Hamptactor in tons is offering Byways, a modern luring village house built in traditional stone people out just outside the village of Painswick of cities in the Cotswolds.

The house has four bedrooms and the rent is £1,200 per month. At the same rent, and also in Gloucestershire, is the Old Granary in Brimpsfield, a conversion with four bedrooms and two bathrooms.

Those looking for a less demanding commute to the capital might be interested in a pretty period cottage in Kingwood Common available through Hamptons' Henley on Thames office in Oxfordshire. The cottage has three bedrooms, two bathrooms and sizeable gardens. Fortunately for the rejuctant horticulturist, the £1,500 per month rent includes the services of a gardener.

the country, there are a number of essential requirements that prospective tenants look for in a property. Proximity to a station for the journey to work and access to good schools are both top of the rentals list.

Not surprisingly, a lack of traffic noise is considered essential as well by most country tenants. Luckily, this is not something that worries the Shirleys, whose house is situated at the end of a mile-long private drive. If a property does not quite meet a tenant's requirements, then changes can be made. There might be little point in landscaping the garden if your lease is only for 12 months, but by "amortising" the cost you can get a proper return on your investment — however long or short your stay in the property.

Essentially, amortising means devising a scale of depreciation for the asset—for example, an Aga—added by the tenant. If the tenant moves out before the the Aga has depreciated to zero value, they can obtain a refund on some of their original outlay from the landlord because they will be the one to benefit from the improvement to the property.

Now it seems that everyone wants their own little piece of our ever-dwindling English

PROPERTY NEWS

HAZEL HOLT. in Bishop's Waltham, Hampshire is for sale. On May 23, 1892, The Times described the late Victorian house as "a favourable opportunity of securing a gentle-man's residence of moderate size. The house is approached by an exceedingly pretty drive, with a lodge and particu-larly good and productive old grounds and walled gardens, maintained by one man and assistant." Now the estate and six-bedroom house with 49 acres are available as two lots costing £500,000 and £125,000 each. For more information, contact Knight Frank, 0171-629 8171 or Ian Judd and Partners, 01489 896422.

PRIME London residential rental values rose by 8.7 per cent for houses and 7.7 per cent for flats on average last year, says Savilis. The highest rises were in Holland Park, Notting Hill and Kensington, with increases of 15 per cent for houses and 13 per cent for fiats. Values rose by 5-6 per cent in Hampstead, Knightsbridge and areas of Docklands.

THE PEAK Cavern, a limestone cave with a 100ft-wide entrance in Castleton, Derbyshire is to let through Smiths Gore. Owned by the Duchy of Lancaster, it was dubbed one of the "marvels of England" in the 12th century by Henry of Huntingdon. The Duchy hopes tenants will attract a wider audience than the 28,000 who visit each summer. Price to be negotiated. For more information, ring 01904 655894.

HOUSE sales will continue to increase this year, according to the Corporate Estate Agents property index. The number of sales in 1996 was up 15.3 per cent on the previous year, with sales in the fourth quarter of last year 20.6 per cent higher than the same period in 1995, while the number of contracts exchanged rose by 29 per cent.

SELLING POINTS CONSERVATORIES

A conservatory adds value to a house, provided it blends in well and is properly built

hree bedrooms, two reception rooms, kitchen, bathroom, gas central heating and ... a conservatory. Just one extra room but enough to give a hint of gracious living to your house's otherwise prosaic particulars.

As property accessories, conservatories are pretty hot. They are just for relaxing with a gin fizz surrounded by potted palms or indulging horticultural fantasies, tending bougainvillea and passion flowers while the rain drips outside and the temperature drops.

On a more practical note, a conservatory can be a valuable additional and adaptable space. Provided it is well built, it can boost the value of a house. And in smaller houses, where it adds significantly more space, you may more than recoup your investment.

Conservatories have come a long way since

Conservatories have come a long way since the days of sun lounges that were often just glorified sheds with plastic roofs, tacked on to the back of a house. But with the range of styles now available, from Regency swirls to Victorian gothic, do not expect to impress potential housebuyers if your conservatory is little more than a covered space for the family wellies.

Today's homeowner wants a conservatory that is light, spacious, heated and doubled glazed to allow year-round use. Prospective housebuyers viewing in the depths of winter are not going to be sold on your garden room if they are hit by a glacial chill and the sight of frost-blackened plants. Nor will they be struck by its charms on a summer day if lack of ventilation and shade has recreated Saharan conditions that leaves them gasping for air.

Even if your conservatory is not quite on the scale of Crystal Palace, you will want to show off its space and adaptability, and not have buyers tripping over abandoned bicycles and garden chairs. You may be using it as a children's play and general purposes room, but prospective buyers may have visions of candlelit dining while gazing out on the garden or of using it as a studio or office space.

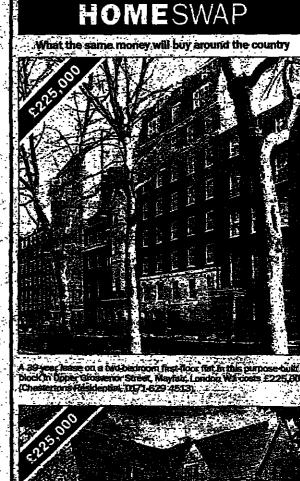

or of using it as a studio of office space.

Glassing in a roof terrace or perhaps enlarging a basement kitchen by adding a small conservatory-style extension adds a distinctive touch to town houses. A conservatory may also be a solution where extra space is needed but more substantial structural changes to the house are not possible.

t is important to make sure a conservatory blends with the house. Avoid the temptation of gothic fantasies complete with fussy finials, crests and roof lanterns if your house has a modern, no-nonsense look to it.

Prices start from about E5,000 for doubleglazed conservatories with PVC frames, while timber-framed rooms start from about £6,000-E7,000. Planning permission is not always necessary, depending on the size of the conservatory, its location and what other additions may have been made to the house. On average, construction time is about 1-2 weeks.

It is just the sort of place where you expect bearded types wearing Guernsey sweaters to use salty language and break into sea shanties. So it comes as neither a surprise that a retired Admiral is selling his Georgian property (previous occupants have included a Vice-Admiral and a Rear-Admiral) nor that he likes Emsworth so much that he is moving into a smaller property 50 yards away in

Unless we are prepared to support our rural shops, the supermarket juggernaut will inevitably kill off our small market towns bought the last jam tart that Mrs Runacles ever sold, which was a shame because it was also the first I had ever had from her. I opened the door of a tiny shop on the outskirts of a town not far from here, seeking refreshment after a long drive. All that was left in the window were two lonely jam tarts. I bought them both. On leaving the shop I noticed a scribbled sign on the door which said "Closing Down" and it gave that day's date. By the time I had eaten the tarts, the ovens of this tiny bakery were cooling, never to be relit.

So what? Does it matter that an elderly lady no longer had either the energy or the profit motive to spoon her homemade raspberry jam into hand-crafted pastry cases and offer them for sale? Probably not. Life has gone on without her, no one starved, she is probably

We shall not see the likes of her again. The days when running a rural business meant little more than putting things in the window and expecting neighbours to beat a path to your door are long gone. This does not mean the village shop is completely dead: there will always be wealthier communities who will fundraise to support a post office, community shop or whatever. But, by and large. shops out in the sticks have had it.

You can blame Government policy, planning laws, paperwork, oppressive health and safety regulations; but in the end it is the customer's choice where to shop. If we did not support that little shop, why should it support us? I cannot be the only one round here who felt a twinge of conscience at the thought that if we had bought a few more tarts from Mrs Runacles and a few less from Mr Kipling, her bakery might still be there, run by a new generation.

If you accept it is the fault of all of us in rural areas that we have so few village shops left, is it not time we decided what we really think about the next swipe at rural life before it is too late? This time it is the future of small which hangs in the balance. I live not far from a typical one: no need to name it because what is happening here will be no different to what is happening in a

A few years ago the Wednesday livestock market Farmers moved to the larger regional markets. The site was sold for a small supermarket development. This, surprisingly, was not the disaster some people feared. The location put it at the heart of the town, so it maintained a flow of people down the high street. Only one general grocer ciosed as a result. and a butcher retired. But half a dozen maders still gathered on Wednesdays for a modest street market. and even when the recession bit local businesses kept their heads just above water. So the butcher, baker, watchmaker, wool shop, newsagent, ironmonger, builder's yard and Co-Op are still there. Now comes news of a housing development on the outskirts of the town. Good news or bad? It might have been splendid news, were it not application by Tesco to build a store there as well. Now, I like Tesco You can turn your nose up at supermarkets if you like, but I will not. They are warm, clean, well stocked, and you can park the car.

ompare this with the nearby high street where the council charges you to park, paints yellow lines where there need be none, hands out parking rickets, and generally ensures you get wet and cold trudging from shoo to shop. You need to be a saint to support the average high street these days.

However, I do try to support it because somewhere in a rural life there must be somewhere to which you are drawn, to meet other people, to get the huzz. That is what I do in this market town. I buy a paper, drink a cup of coffee, buy a packet of seeds, get my watch fixed, lorget to pick up the dry cleaning. Four shops, four people met, four "buzzes" acquired, Refreshed, I happily retreat to the solitary farmhouse life. Hundreds do what I do - usually on market day and have done for generations.

With a glossy attraction up the road,

however, convenience will inevitably outweigh sociability, the shops will close and the town will go silent. Bad news in the long run for its people, and their children especially; for what will will any longer qualify this place to be a town? If high street shops fold, tea shops and pubs will follow windows will be boarded up, buses will not bother to stop. no one will put up the Christmas lights. If you know a small town where this has happened and you have successfully overcome the creeping death. I know of a row of splendid shopkeepers who will soon be dying to know how you did it. At the moment I fear for their future. No only for their own sakes, but because I do not much fancy an environment in which supermarkets not only have charge of our pockets, but our hearts and minds,

too. Keep buying those jam tarts, or there will be none for tea tomorrow.

Thorny problem? Call in the flying ponies

If plants and wildlife are threatened, the answer could be

the Comish cliffs near Padstow, so it must be the depths of winter. Transported from their normal habitat on a Dartmoor estate owned by the Duchy of Cornwall, they will spend the next three months chewing through the bramble and gorse within sniffing distance of the Atlantic.

The eight pure-bred ponies are there for one purpose to act as a nature conservation tool on 60 acres of the Pentire Peninsula belonging to the National Trust. In spring, when they might eat the young plants the Trust wants to encourage, the ponies will return home, a job well done. Grazing animals have been part of the landscape for thousands of years but the idea of using certain breeds of cattle, sheep, goats or ponies to safeguard species of wildlife is dictated by changes in agriculture since the war.

arly grazed so wildlife thrived as a matter of course. Where land subsequently went out of grazing and was not used for anything else, scrub tended to return. The only way to mainain the botanical and insect life was to start grazing again. The Dartmoor ponies on the Pennire Peninsula are seen as the ideal animal for the purpose. They're hardy, able to cope with poorer ground, light enough not to do damage to the footpaths and good on their feet on the steep slopes," says Simon Ford, the National Trust's countryside manager for north Cornwall. They'll leave the heather but graze the more competitive species like bramble and blackthorn. This allows grassland species like sawwort. slender birdsfoot and trefoil to grow much more easily. The small pearl-bordered fritillary. small copper and green hairstreak butterflies are returning in numbers too. After seven years it has become clear that grazing has led to enormous benefits in terms of the wildlife here," he adds. The National Trust manages 38 nature conservation grazing schemes in Cornwall where animals are selected by the Trust according to their suitability for the job. Hence 16 different breeds of sheep are used elsewhere at Pentire including Swaledale, Soay, Shetland and Jacob.

These sheep — light on their feet and suited to the weather graze the maritime grassland, creating short grass which should be rich in flowers. There is also an important iron age castle here, called the Rumps, which heavier animals could damage. Sometimes troubleshooting sheep are brought in for only a month and then moved to other sites. One "flying flock" of 200, including Hebrideans and Shetlands, is employed by the Norfolk Wildlife Trust to clear coarse vegetation so that finer grasses, heather and wild flowers can flourish. Older and unusual breeds of animal are much favoured for conservation work because they are hardier, more suited to rougher vegetation and do not require the large amounts of nutrients that more modern breeds need. On the Isle of Wight, for instance, one of the Before the war, marginal most successful conservation National Trust has been the feral goat.

> ntroduced five years ago - the goats were originally brought from north Devon but now belong to the National Trust - the animals spend the whole year browsing 100 acres of Trustowned land at Bonchurch

Down near Ventnor.

Tony Tutton, the island's National Trust property manager, says: A lot of the unimproved chalk grassland on the island is in danger of encroachment from wild privholm-oak, bramble and blackthorn. The holm-oak is particularly intrusive but the 60-odd feral goats control all the scrub and in so doing allow plants like salad burnet. horseshoe vetch, stemless thistle, early gentian and rock-rose to flourish." Fifteen New Forest ponies are used on 80 acres of heath at Luccombe Down, north of Bonchurch, where in the 1980s two very cold winters killed off all the gorse. The ponies nibble the grass which has come back into these bare areas, encouraging heather to spread. Insects here are eaten by the rare Dartford warbler,

The National Trust uses Dartmoor ponies as a nature conservation tool on the Pentire Peninsula in Cornwall. Elsewhere goats, sheep and cattle perform a similar function grazing takes place on 108. English Nature actually manages - directly or indirectly most of these reserves. Some of the sites it owns itself, some it leases from farmers and landowners and there are others where management is retained by the landowner but under an agreement with English Nature. Managing means looking after the whole estate, its habitats and species. Maurice Massey. English Nature's management co-ordinator, licence by other people. We come to an agreement with the farmer about which animals are best for the job, where they graze and for how long during the year to achieve the nature conservation interest.

Sometimes grants are made to the farmer to assist with positive management of the site - hundreds or thousands of pounds - but payments vary from site to site and depend on how much the farmer's aims and our aims correspond."

There is one footnote to this story. This type of grazing has given a huge shot in the arm for rare breeds like Soay, Hebridean and Manx Loghtan sheep and minority cattle breeds like Dexter, Longhorn and Belted Galloway. As Peter King at the Rare Breeds Survival Trust says: "Conservation grazing has been a splendid way of demonstrating the part that these breeds can play in farming in the future."

AMONG a flock of black-headed gulls out on a playing-field, you sometimes notice a gull that looks slightly different. It is a little taller, and when it walks it does not waggle its bottom in the ungainly way the others do.

Look a little closer, and further differences become apparent. Whereas the black-headed gulls have red legs and beaks, in this bird they are yellowgreen. It lacks the dark mark behind the eye that the black-headed gulls have in winter, and although, like them, it has black wingtips, in this bird they are flecked with white "mirrors". It is like a small herring gull, except that its beak is not so ferocious looking.

Rather surprisingly, this bird is called a common guil. In fact, it is only common in the summer in Scotland. Over most of the British Isles, it is far outnumbered in the winter by the black-headed gulls. There are about three million of those here in January and February, and only about 700,000 common gulls. In both species, a large majority of these wintering birds are immigrants from continental Europe, and will so back there to breed in the spring. We shall be left with getting on for half a million pairs of black-headed gulls (which by then will actually have their black heads), and perhaps 70,000 pairs of common guils. I always like sponing a common gull among its commoner relatives. It has such a delicate, refined air as it stands there. In fact, it can scream and squall above a rubbish dump with the best of them, in hard weather.

However, more often in the winter it is found in ones or twos with other species of gull, or else in flocks out on certain kinds of farmland. Large flocks are sometimes found on ploughland, but they like best to feed on pastures grazed by sheep or cattle, and are especially attracted to chalky uplands, where they find abundant earthworms in the soil beneath the grass.

In the evening they will fly a long way to roost, settling down rather restlessly for the night on estuaries or reservoirs. En route they fly steadily and gracefully. They can also be quite acrobatic when swooping down on a field or a stretch of water. One has even been seen looping the loop on the way

Next month the residents and the winter visitors will both start making their way north to their breeding grounds, and for a while they will be seen everywhere in Britain. But by the spring, there will be very few left in England or Wales.

Odd pairs are found breeding south of the Border every year, particularly Kent coast. These lonely couples are thought to be continental birds that did not go home. But in summer most of the British nesters will be up on the Scottish moors.

They nest by the sea and near lochs, making a scrape for their eggs on islets and sandbanks, on dry patches in bogs, or high up on the moorland

On the hillsides these white birds can be seen from a long way off, sitting on their nests among the stones and grass and the springing heather. For common gulls, they are always uncommonly beautiful.

The importance of TeNS as an analgesic technique especially in the control of pain has been confirmed. Doubts about the clinical efficiency of Tens have been dismissed Johnson M.I., Ashton C.H., Thompson J.W., (1992) The clinical use of TeNS Journal of Orthopaedic Journal of Ord Medicine No. 1,3-12.

TeNS should be considered as a simple, safe and reusable first line treatment for many pain conditions. It can be used long-term with no risk of senous arverse effects. Johnson M.I., Ashton C.H., Thompson J.W., (1992) Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine Vol. 85, 267-268.

■ Electrical stimulation is a clinically established method of relieving pain"...... Pain Relief Foundation, Walton Hospital, Liverpool

Professor Ashton of Newcastle University ran tests comparing the results of using TenS and comparing it with Aspirin. Her work showed that TeNS had a more significant effect on the nerves being

In another study Professor Ashton found that TeNS was effective in controlling cold induced pain. Patients placed their arm in buckets of ice after using TeNS - the study found they could tolerate more pain after using TeNS.

A study at the University of Miami found that TeNS in addition to being useful in short term, had a long term benefit for pain sufferers. This group also found improved function and quality of life as well as reduced use of medicines.

There have been over 200 research studies published worldwide on TeNS since 1991.

PAIN RELIEF GUIDE

Is this the drug free solution to a pain free life that we've all been waiting for?.... If so popping pills could become even harder to swallow!

Joung or old, rich or poor, the one I thing we can rely on is that, sooner or later, pain will pay an unwelcome visit to all our lives. Moreover, neither youth, nor health, nor vigour can offer any guarantee of immunity, for it can and frequently does strike any one of us at any time. BLOCKING THE PATHWAY TO PAIN

One of the latest methods of controlling pain that seems to bring considerable relief to many relies on the 'gaze theory' first propounded in the 1950s by Erinsh neutranatomist. Patrick Wall and Canadian psychophysiologist Rocali Meizack After spending ten year researching the subject at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, USA, Wall and Meizack concluded that our recognition of the sensation of pain involves two types of nerve fiche, each of which sends conflicting messages to the brain was the spinal cord.

Apparently, one type of fibre carries the "hurt" or pain message to the brain, while the other, thicker type is capable of acting in a contradictory way by blocking out for erecting a gate to: the "hurt" signal, thereby preventing its transmission to the brain.

In fact, acupuncture and pain-killers both work on this 'gate' theory to allievate pain. As does Transcutaneous Electrical Nerve Simulation (TeNS), which is now being employed with increasing success in NHS Hospitals and Clinics throughout the UK. Utilising precisely the same effective principle, researchers found that IeNS produces an intense simulation which activates an area of the brain which, in turn, inhibits the pathways that transmit pain signals Although it is not a cure. TeNS is now accepted by the medical profession as being of significant benefit to many in controlling any kind of physical pair. While TeNS has a remarkably wide range of applications - it has proven to be successful in alternating pain associated with a variety of allments - it seems to work better when the area of pain is localised rather millions suffering.

For the countless millions suffering pain due to sports injuries, muscle strains, joint problems, period pains or other causes, the TeNS approach to pair, management and control ofters an ideal, non-invasive, drug-free approach to living a normal, para-tire life. SHIRE DESIGN ELECTRONICS

Aromatherapy for animals? Ask the dog with travel sickness, the paranoid puss or the racehorse with sore shins

A sniff a day keeps vets away

ristin Kosowan has ing for pet owners. Ms been an animal Kosowan a science graduate. aromatherapist for runs one-day aromatherapy nearly seven years. ever since a patient asked for help to cure a Jack Russell terrier of travel sickness. From that casual inquiry. Ms Kosowan has seen her practice, Essentially Animals, in Mariborough, Wiltshire, grow into a full-time job, which takes her all over the country. and cost £45 per person. There are separate workshops for car She has treated horses, dogs. cats and other animals, including a bantam.

Aromatherapy is natural healing using highly concentrated extracts - called essential oils - taken from herbs. flowers and other plants.

'Using plants to help healing is the oldest medicine in the world. If you think about it, it is going back to what animals used to graze on." Ms Kosowan says. By combining essential oils in the correct quantities, aromatherapy works holistically by promoting healing and health within the body. The application of a variety of oils, shampoos, lo-tions and poultices has helped her to cure a racehorse with sore shins brought about by galloping in training, a cat so timid that its answer to everything in life was to run away. and the reluctant travelling Jack Russell.

It is the ability to know which oils to blend and in what strengths that lies at the heart of the aromatherapist's work. Essential oils come in different strengths and with varying properties. A minute amount of some oils can be highly potent and need to be used sparingly.

Aromatherapy is not something you should attempt if you haven't been properly trained." Ms Kosowan says. "Even though all the products are natural, no natural product is 100 per cent safe.

There are levels of safety and precautions must be taken but once the appropriate preparation has been formuated, it is simple to use."

To provide some basic train-workshops to demonstrate some of the natural ways of alleviating a wide range of mental and physical ailments. from skin, joint and respiratory problems to hormonal and behavioural problems. These are held monthly at venues around the country and dog owners. The bulk of Ms Kosowan's clientele come to her with "common ailments" such as fleas and ear mites, for which non-prescription treatment is available over the counter. More serious complaints usually find their way to her by way of a vet.

Sometimes a vet will ring me when he's tried everything else. Others call because they have an open mind towards holistic healing." The British Veterinary Association supports the use of aromatherapy. describing it as "another tool in the kit bag with which to help cure animals".

In other cases, pet owners will often approach Ms Kosowan direct. "I always ask whether owners have talked to their vet and what they have said. I am not allowed to diagnose and I prefer to work alongside vets," she says. Because she offers alternative therapies for animals, Ms Kosowan is subject to the Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966 which states that only the owner, a vet or someone acting in consultation with a vet may treat an animal. Having ascertained the problem, she will prescribe one of the many off-the-shelf aromatherapy remedies or custom-blend a lotion, which is then applied to a part of the animal where the hair is thinnest in order for the oils to be absorbed by the skin. Where the ailment is in a joint, the compound is applied directly.

Other methods of healing include the use of special

Although the number of vets in Britain who also practise aromatherapy is small, the profession has taken a positive view of alternative therapies. Tim Couzens is a vet who has turned his back on conventional medicine and exclusively uses alternative methods at his holistic centre in East Sussex. His clients fall into two categories: those who believe in alternative medicine as a first choice and those who come as a last resort when all else has

"Aromatherapy is just part of the practice. There can be times when I may not use it for weeks," he says. In keeping with the ethos of holistic medicine, Mr Couzens combines his knowledge with homoeopathy, herbalism and other natural methods.

A VET WRITES

Our back garden faces open countryside and last March our ten-year-old cat was attacked and killed -we believe by a fox. I contacted the RSPCA, which said that this was unlikely because foxes don't take domestic animals. We are planning to get another kitten this spring. Could he fall victim to a fox?

A I have nothing good to say about urban foxes. They are vermin, like wild rats, mink or mice. They take poultry, per rabbits, guinea pigs, lambs and the chicks of ground-nesting birds, killing many more than they can possibly eat. But they are cowards. They won't tackle healthy cats because cats fight back. When cats and foxes meet, they usually ignore each other. But when a row develops, the fox usually backs off. Your new kitten will meet plenty of dangers throughout his life, but foxes are at the bottom of the hazard list. Our ten-year-old cat, Hubert, developed a sore on his upper lip. The vet called it a rodent ulcer and prescribed tablets for it. He said it could be removed by freezing it under anaesthetic. What caused it?

A Rodent ulcers are com-mon. The scientific name is eosinophilic granuloma and they are categorised as "conditions of unknown origin". Suggested causes include infections by various viruses or bacteria: persistent irritation resulting from licking by the cat's rough tongue; a link with feline leukaemia, or some form of hypersensitivity.

The varying responses to treatment support the view that there are several different causes. Some ulcers clear up with hormone treatment. Others respond to corticosteroids. Surgical treatment - either cryo-surgery, which destroys the ulcer by freezing it, or simple excision — usually solves the problem, but it can recur. And some rodent ulcers disappear spontaneously. without treatment.

We bought Pippa, our Cocker Spaniel puppy. from a pet shop two months ago. We have just noticed she has a hernia. Will this affect her and should we have it operated on?

A I don't know. If it is an umbilical hernia which is a hole left in the ahdominal wall where the umbilical cord was attached and no bigger than a medium sized grape, there is little chance of trouble in the future. If it is larger, see your vet and take his advice.

I hope you are going to have Pippa spayed. If so, the hernia could be repaired at the same time, which would mean using one anaesthetic for two operations, with reduced costs people in Britain have ever heard of the GDS method. It was developed in the 1960s by a Belgian physiotherapist and osteopath named Godelieve Denys-Struyf, who has since taught the method at the European School of Osteopathy, in Maidstone, Kent. In essence it synthesises

FROM TOM RHODES IN WASHINGTON

AN AVERAGE of 15,000 Americans write to President Clinton every day but only those bearing one of two magic numbers can be certain to reach the Oval Office.

These "Dear Bill" letters are part of a private epistolary brains trust that Mr Clinton has established with his oldest friends and earliest

At a time when Washington is obsessed by questions of access to the President, particularly from Asian donors to the Democratic Party, this small cadre of loyalists provides perhaps the most telling insight into how this President tests the waters in his nation.

They are the chosen few who have been given a secret nine-digit post code and a personal fax number, the only group of American citizens who can honestly say they have a direct line to Mr Clinton and his policy. Any letter bearing the secret "zip" code is quickly removed from the daily pile in the White House post room and placed under the President's door. The faxes that spew into the small cubbyhole next to the Oval Office are swiftly rushed to his desk. When Carolyn Staley, the preacher's daughter raised in the house next to Billy Clinton, wanted to rebuke the President last spring, she sent a fax. Mrs Staley, now deputy director of the National Institute for Literacy, said the Clinton budget would reduce spending on adult literacy to below the levels of the Bush Administration. Within hours she had a call from a budget analyst, and adult education pro-grammes are now scheduled to receive a $95 million injection in this year's presidential budget.

Earlier this month, when the Supreme Court was hearing arguments in the sexual harassment suit brought against Mr Clinton by Paula Jones, a former Arkansas state employee, Mrs Staley sent condolences to her old friend.

"At some level this is killing him," Republican joins Cabinet

liam Cohen of Maine was sworn in as Defence Secretary yesterday to become the first Republican to serve in a Clinton Cabinet. He succeeds William Perry.

President Clinton said the Senate's 99-0 vote to confirm Mr Cohen "sent a strong signal of its san spirit to preserve and enhance our national security. Bill Cohen is the embodiment of that spirit." Mr Cohen said he looked forward to serving to a new century with clarity of purpose". (AP)

she said. "He wishes he could walk out, just casually up and down the street, and have people come up to him and talk about what they're thinking ... We try to keep him on target. We're real people. We're real salt of the earth, blue collar, no silver spoon in the mouth."

Another who stays in contact is David Leopoulos, a chum from elementary school who is now a travelling computer software salesman. He will send as many as three faxes a week from his laptop on subjects from the North American Free Trade Agreement to what he has heard on radio talk-shows around the country.

Philip Jamison, in his class at Georgetown University and a Vietnam veteran, told the President that normalising relations with that country was a good thing. Mauria Aspell, the only other non-Catholic at St John's parish school in Hot Springs, Arkansas, is another correspondent; Tommy Caplan, an au-thor who sometimes works on speeches, is one, too. "He contacts them afterwards by phone late at night and even his closest advisers don't know who he has talked to. He has to feel he is getting all the information before making a decision," said one White House aide yesterday.

"It's all part of the 2lst-century
outreach. If Al Gore becomes president he will probably have his own e-mail and personal website."

Poring over these missives, between 100 and 500 a week, is said to be an indispensable part of Mr Clinton's private time, the three to four hours that have been built into his daily schedule by Erskine

Canadian trappers cash in on fad for fur

FROM RICHARD CLEROUX

A SALE of furs opened in Toronto yesterday and is expected to provoke protests by animal rights activists around the world. More than 100,000 pelts are expected to he sold this weekend after a return to popularity for fur garments.

Alison Beal, of the Fur
Institute of Canada, said the demand was being driven by fashion designers and the fashion press in New York.

The sudden resurgence of popularity of furs, which had been in steady decline for the past ten years, is attributed in large part to the prominence given furs in Vogue magazine and other fashion publica-

More than 80 per cent of the furs sold in Toronto this weekend will find their way to New York.

Only a year ago fur sales were so depressed that the annual June fur auction in ending a tradition that went back almost 200 years.

The new-found popularity is a bonanza for Canadian trappers, most of whom are aboriginal people living in remote areas of northern Canada for whom there is little else by way of work.

In poor years, a beaver skin will fetch $80 (£49) for a trapper, double that for an ordinary fox pelt. But when furs are rare the market can fluctuate and even a modest beaver peit can fetch $200.

From Richard Owen in rome

THE Pope yesterday accused the world's media of mocking religious believers by portraying them in a bad light and bombarding the young with "unwholesome images", rather than reinforcing moral values in the run-up to the millennium. He also said he sympathised with the "sufferings of divorced people", but said remarriage after divorce constituted "moral disorder". In a message for World Communications Day, the Pope said the global explosion of information technology had given people "an ever-growing choice of sources ... but the greater the choice, the harder it may be to choose responsiwas increasingly diffi cult to "protect one's eyes and ears from images and sounds which arrive through the media unexpectedly and uninvited". The media reached families "including very young children ... What way

hard to guard their children from unwholesome messages, the Pope said, and it was "shocking how easily advanced communication technologies can be exploited by those whose intentions are evil". The Vatican has shown growing concern over sex and violence on television, and pornography on the Internet.

The Pope said many people in the Third World aspired to new technology, but were concerned about "domination of the media by so-called Western culture ... Media products are seen as in some v representing values that the West holds dear ... The truth may well be that the foremost value they really represent is commercial profit.

aspirations or were morally unlifting and helped people to lead better lives were decreasing. "It is not easy to remain optimistic about the positive influence of the media when they appear either to ignore the vital role of religion in people's lives or to mock

religious belief." Speaking at the end of a Vatican conference on the family, the Pope said the Church could "not be indifferent to the painful problem" of divorce and remarriage. The task of the Church was to deal with family disintegration through "pastoral care consis-tent with Christ's teaching".

The Pope's guardian of doctrinal purity. Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, yesterday also upheld the ban on the ordination of women. But he surprised observers by decreeing that those who advocated women Programmes which dealt priests were guilty of "an error" rather than "heresy".

NEW ON VIDEO

AIR WAR: BATTLES OF WORLD WAR TWO is the most exciting video on air combat ever made! It brings the battle for the skies vividly to life, with over an hour and a half of non-stop authentic footage and combat film. Extensive use is made of gun camera footage, as well as rare colour film from both Europe and the Pacific.

Almost every important aircraft of World War Two is featured in action, together with a review of the major air battles and combat tactics.

Typhoons, Tempests, Mosquitos, Invaders, Havocs and Mustangs are all captured in action over Occupied Europe, taunching devastating strikes against trains, troop convoys, barges and Luftwaffe air bases. Lancasters, Wellingtons, Blenheims, He-111s,

B-17s and Superfortresses demonstrate the destructive power of the bomber in action. while Sphires, Hurricanes, P-38s, Me 109s and Me 262s dogfight for aerial supremacy.

in the Pacific, Zeros, Helicats and Corsairs go head to head over the Japanese and American fleets while, in the Atlantic, the Sunderlands and Catalinas of RAF Coastal Command prove their effectiveness in combating the threat of the marauding U-Boat packs. AIR WAR: BATTLES OF WORLD WAR TWO puts you in the cockpit, for a combat pilot's eye view of the greatest air battles ever fought!

n Greece they have a saying: "The British go to the islands, the Germans go to the mainland." As a generalisation, it holds the road well, but less well than it

The British, drawn by Lord Byron's incantation about the isles of Greece, and by a vague sense of island-to-island affinity, fly down in swarms to lay waste to Corfu. Rhodes, and any other bit of Greece surrounded by water and serving English breakfasts.

The Germans, only a car ride away and more inclined to take their sightseeing seriously, used to make a land thrust through Yugoslavia to Athens, Delphi and Olympia, penetrating all the way through the Peloponnese to the three dagger-like promontories at its tip.

Since the former Yugoslavia became a war zone, this route has become difficult. As a result, many sleepy villages in the Peloponnese, where accommodation is more likely to be advertised as "Zimmer" than "Rooms", now find themselves sleepier than they would wish. So it is a good time to tear yourself away from the sun-baked rocks which pepper the Aegean and explore the mainland.

There, you can find a different Greece. Several, in fact. Those three promontories -Messinia, Mani and Malea are like a trident jabbing into the Mediterranean. They look alike on the map, but they have quite different characters. The most dramatic contrasts are between Messinia and Mani, separated by a fiord narrow enough to look across, yet utterly opposite landscapes.

"After the visitors leave every year, it rains for six months," a native told us in the village of Chrani, our base in Messinia. This tidy seasonal segregation of rain and sun is the clue to the Messinian climate. However fiercely the summer blazes, a trickle of water still runs in the rocky gullies, shaded by fig trees and elderberry. The land. is a cornucopia of lemons, meions, nectarines and vines. Here is the source of the Kalamata olives, which are among Greece's juiciest and most ubiquitous exports.

By Greek standards, this fertile country is nothing less than lush. It has glassy lakes, where the reflection of the

The first recorded games at Olympia were in 776 BC

the giant green calamus reeds grow ten or 12 feet tall. The stems look like bamboo, and the dense thickets seem so exotic that it would scarcely be a surprise to see a giant panda shouldering its way through the stems, or even a crocodile.

The sunshine is always tempered by a haze. Across the fiord from our waterside bal-cony in Chrani, the Taiyetus mountains, which make the backbone of the Mani, were only faintly visible — except at dawn, where they were out-lined in silhouette by the sun rising behind, as it pierced the radiant haze like an X-ray.

All winter, the clouds blow in across Messinia from the west, and when they touch the hilltops, they let their blessings pour down. Afterwards, they blow across the parched Mani, exhausted, and leave it as parched as ever. The Mani is an arid moonscape of bare rock and thorn bushes, with its own alarming beauty and the strangest village architecture in all Greece. It is hard country, with a history of brigands, anchorites and blood feuds. Geographically it is the utmost tip of Sparta, and life there until recently was as spartan as it is possible to be. Profoundly inaccessible and introverted for centuries, it is now easy to visit by a new fast road from Kalamata, which may be a blessing or a curse.

Messinia, by contrast, is soft country. In classical times, the hard Spartans generally kept it firmly under their thumb. This means that it is a region without many classical remains — the Messinians were not allowed to hang on to swallows swooping to drink on the wing. It has many marshy places where beds of dotted it with the hulks of Ottoman and Frankish castles, which the Nazis later found useful. But those in search of columns and architraves do not have to drive far north to find Olympia, one of the richest classical sites in Greece. Olympia is as lush as original Olympic games and the earthquake-tumbled ruins of the temple of Zeus among shady eucalyptus trees and flowering shrubs. The temple of Zeus was an equal rival to the Parthenon in its day, and its carvings of gods and heroes, beautifully displayed and still russetcoloured from their centuries covered by iron-rich silt, are arguably even more exciting than the Parthenon marbles.

Messinia, so that one can explore the stadium of the Messinia sandy Pylos" and says it was ruled by King Nestor, extremely rich and extremely old. When Telemachos, son of the lost Odysseus, steals away from home to hunt for his father, Nestor is the first person he visits in search of news. The old king, who had beautiful manners, sat the lad down beside him on soft rugs of fleece there on the sand of the sea shore". The rest of Greece is all rocks, but this coast is lined with beautiful white beaches, many almost unvisited, and dunes of fine sand minutely criss-crossed with the footsteps of a diverse wildlife.

Every year, in a highly vulnerable migration which was already ancient when Nestor was a schoolboy, turtles come out of the sea here to lay their eggs in the sand. At the top of the beach, one can find rows of curious little enclosures marked with pebbles and chicken-wire, with signs on upright sticks, like tombstones in a pers' ceme-tery. When the turtles clamber ashore at night, observers with torches note where they lay their eggs, and mark the spots to warn people not to tread on the eggs.

I have not the slightest doubt which beach Nestor was sitting on when he spread out his sheepskin for Telemachos. The place is a little way from modern Pylos, at the other end of the bay of Navarino, where Admiral Codrington achieved Greek independence almost by accident one afternoon in 1827, by sinking 50 Turkish ships though he was not under orders to do anything of the kind. The same bay was the battleground in one of the all too rare engagements of the Peloponnesian War in which the Athenians gained an advantage over the Spartans, and did not throw it away.

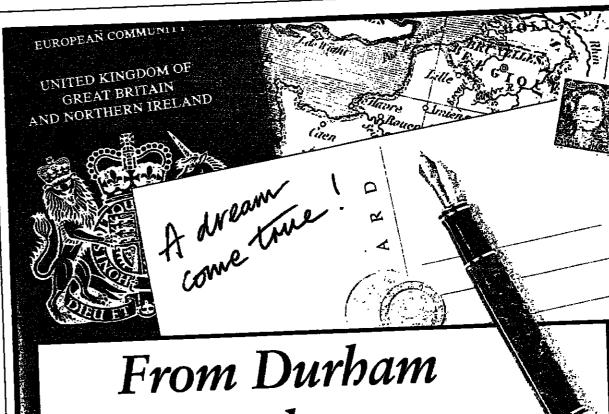

In Nestor's time, Pylos was near the north end of the bay. The ruins of an archaic for-tress still stand there giddily on top of a steep crag. This crag is hollow: the fortress is perched above the vault of a cobwebbed cathedral-like cavern, still known as Nestor's Cave. The cave overlooks a crescent cove of white sand fit for any king. Hollowed out between two promontories scattered with prehistorical artefacts, and backed by dunes, it is so symmetrical that it seems to have been drawn with a pair of compasses. Its waters shelve gently from green to turquoise to peacock blue calm, safe and clean. In auturn and spring, ospreys stop on their way to or from Africa. to gorge themselves on the fish in the lagoon behind.

This exquisite haven is almost deserted. Sunbathers may overlook it. because its name in Greek, Voithio Kilia ("Ox Belly" Cove) is unalluring. More practically, it cannot be reached except on foot, or along bone-shaking rough tracks through marshes and calamus thickets.

I hope those tracks remain forever unimproved, and that Ox Belly Cove will always be known only to the handful who hike across the dunes, and reach that immaculate curve of blue and white, where they can sit down on the sand beside Nestor's ghost.

Greece: On the tiny island of Paxos, days are spent on little else than walking, boating and eating ...

We're busy doing nothing – cheers

axos: the very word suggests peace. It was a pity, then, that the message had not got through to the instructors at the sailing school below our villa. They were getting ready for the summer season, painting boats and hammering nails from morning to night.

All of this work was accompanied by loud pop music, which shattered the calm of an otherwise tranquil bay. It began at an ungodly hour (all right, about nine o'clock), just as we were pondering the day's most difficult decision: whether to have croissants or crusty bread fresh from the bakery oven. The last thing I needed before breakfast was Gary Glitter inviting me to be in his gang.

If your idea of a holiday is an endless traipse from museums to art galleries to churches, you would not enjoy Paxos. But for two tired parents with a nine-month-old child in tow, it was bliss. There is little to do, so you do little slowly. Life settles into a pattern - a long, lazy breakfast on the terrace, a stroll to the shops, lunch and a siesta, then perhaps a walk to a deserted beach. When you return, it is almost time for the first of the evening's drinks as the sun sets over the bay, enticing you to stroll out once more for fresh fish at a waterside taverna.

Our villa in Lakka encouraged such an existence. The balcony, bathed in afternoon sun, had views across the entire bay, from the harbour to the open sea. With a book in one hand and a glass of wine in the other, there was little temptation to move on.

Two hours from Corfu by boat, Paxos is like its larger neighbour but without the crowds. Day-trippers may invade Gaios, the capital, for a few hours each afternoon, but the lack of an airport keeps most tourists away. Move up the coast to Loggos or Lakka and you keep running into the same few people, most on their eighth or ninth visit. It is that sort of place.

Seven miles long by two miles wide, the island has one bus, five taxis and a petrol station, which often runs out of petrol. But who needs a car on an island that small? Instead, you walk in the shade of olive trees, a legacy of 400 years of Venetian occupation. In two weeks you can cover every lootpath on the island, so why hurry? Even in May we found an hour or two in the morning and the same before

By walking, you get to see the wild flowers, oleander and rock roses and bright Spanish broom, which burst magically out of the clifftops and olive groves each spring. And, by walking, you discover the hidden coves along the east coast, small pebble beaches in the shadow of forested slopes, which can be reached only on foot or by hired boat. It does not take much effort, in May at least, to find a private beach for the afternoon.

A favourite walk from Lakka led to a Byzantine church, the oldest on the island, where the caretaker showed us in and refused to take any money. The path continued to an abandoned village, with decaying Venetian villas and the ruins of an olive press, before skirting the crest of a dramatic bay as waves crashed against the limestone cliffs below.

This is the wild west coast, where you swim or take a boat at your peril. However, one morning we hired a boatman to take us around the island in an old fishing craft, open to the sun and wind. Ŵhen he was not drawing on his cigarette he was sipping from a can of beer.

Our trip took us past strange rock formations and into caves before the boatman dropped us off for while on Antipaxos, a tiny satellite is-land with vineyards instead of olive groves and some of the finest sandy beaches any-

After a week in Lakka, we moved two miles up the coast to Loggos. Our villa here, high above the harbour, had views stretching 12 miles across the Ionian Sea to the Greek mainland. The terrace was shaded by olive, lemon and rose trees and trellised vines, forcing the sunlight to play peck-a-boo with the whitewashed walls. Where Lakka is yachtie-fash-

The tavernas are so close to the water that you have to move the tables when the bus goes past — at least, that is what had happened to frieir move the tables when the bus goes past — at least, that is what the brochures claim. We It simply made a detour of were not to have the chance to arrived, workmen started digging up the road, and we decided that even Gary Clitter was preferable to the noise of a JCB. People in the harbourside villas wondered

"Aren't you brave bringing a baby to Greece," people kept saying. Not at all; he had never been happier. With few foreign babies there, Adam soon became a celebrity. Shop-keepers gave him lollies and chocolate sticks, against the wishes of his health-conscious parents: waitresses refused to let him leave without a kiss -a privilege not extended to his father. or any traveller, the first visit to Greece is a memorable event; a place full of outstanding attractions that have to be seen. It has been pulling in the crowds for centuries, but I had not been there before.

When I decided to make the trip last September, the question was: where to go in Greece? The consensus among my Hellenophile friends dictated a trip to the islands, but even here there was no unanimity, except that Corfu did not count. It had to be Simi, Paxos, Mykonos, Rhodes or Skiathos, but it must not have an airport, because then it would certainly be spoilt. In the end, I took off for a week in Porto Heli, and no amount of advice could have provided a better choice.

The Peloponnese is overprovided with things to see and do, so it pays to be selective. Besides, the countryside is mountainous, the roads are narrow and Greek drivers are kamikaze-minded, so there is a limit to how far you can sensibly go in a day.

I have no great interest in pre-Christian sites and covered that part of the Greek experience with a visit to the amphitheatre at Epidavros. before pressing on to the coastal town of Nafplio, a Greek gem and a most romantic little place. Indeed, a man I met outside Nafplio told me that if my wife and I went walking through the old streets of the town we would fall in love all over again.

Nafplio offers a combination of narrow, flower-filled streets, a vast central square lined with shops and restaurants, a great Venetian castle on the headland and the Bourtzi, an exquisite, smaller, late medieval fortress out in the bay. In the last century, the Bourtzi was the home of the town's executioner and in this century it served for a while as a luxury hotel, famous in

Greece: Staying in a cave with all mod cons and splendid views is the best way to avoid the crowds on Santorini

Te slept by night in a cave set into an almost perpen-dicular 900ft cliff and swam by day in the caldera - the crater left by the world's biggest volcanic eruption 3,500 years ago.

Across the cliff were the hulks of the caves that were destroyed when the volcano last erupted 40 years ago. Yet hope - or is it greed anxious to cash in on tourism - usually wins over experience. Forty years on, hundreds of "caves", villas and houses once again tumble perilously down the cliffs of Oia (pronounced Eea) in Santorini, the island at the southernmost end of the Cyclades that was claimed by Plato as Atlantis.

Our cave burrowed deep into the cliff but there was no sense of claustrophobia and it came with all mod cons and a terrace overlooking the cal-dera and the volcanic island of Thirasia left behind after the earthquake. Wherever we looked, the colour was blue all the doors, the Aegean that flowed serenely over the caldera so far below and especially the sky. Sometimes it was difficult to detect where the sky ended and the sea began.

The ferries from Athens, a few cruise liners and the occasional yacht or gin palace steamed gently through the channel on their way to Thira. the island's capital.

At night, the sunsets are so spectacular that the clifftop is thronged with tourists. They arrive from all over the island to watch as the sun - appearing as the crimson globe of so many travel brochures sinks below the horizon and sets the sky in flames.

The tidal wave created by the eruption on Santorini was so powerful that it swamped the Minoan civilisation of Crete 80 miles away and left that had flourished there since under mountains of volcanic ash, as well as three tiny islands and beaches that still have black sand.

Only this century have archaeologists uncovered their buried civilisation and the two great tourist attractions of Santorini today are from the Bronze Age — the ancient city of Thira, built on a clifftop at nearly 1,000ft to guard against pirates, and Akrotiri, both easily visited from Oia within an hour by car or the ubiquitous scoolers.

Men and women were living at Akrotiri and ancient Thira, cultivating their vines and citrus trees, 3,500 years before the birth of Christ and it is an eerie and uplifting experience to visit what remains of their civilisation, a Minoan Pompeii. They knew they were living on a volcano and built their houses with stone. putting wooden joints between the walls to guard against earthquakes. They lived in three-storey houses with working lavatories and exquisite murals on the walls. They fished and hunted animals. They worked with gold, silver, copper, tin and bronze. They sculpted vases and decorated them beautifully.

here are equally eerie experiences in visits by boat from modern Thira, with 587 steps down to the port or a dizzying funicular down the cliff, to the Kameni islands in the caldera which seem like coal heaps, on to the scarcely inhabited Thirasia, and then to watch the sunset from the sea.

Most residents of Santorini still live along the top of the cliffs, with their houses turnbling across the top and down the sides like honeycombs. Seen from the caldera, the red and black cliffs rise spectacularly with a spattering of white houses like icing along the top. Seen from the top of the cliffs. they tumble higgledy-piggledy

Most residents of Oia in Santorini live along the cliffs, with their houses tumbling down the sides like honeycombs down the cliffsides, painted white with blue doors, many still in caves, most with balconies, interspersed with tiny alleyways and magnificent views over the sea. Although it has only a few big beaches, mainly at Perissa and Kamari to the south on the eastern plain. Santorini lives today by tourism: once the season ends in October there is an exodus back to Athens and the mainland. The island is so small that it could easily be spoilt and some areas already are. Kamari is a mini Costa del Sol, thronged with lines of sunbeds and the plain packed with hotels, but adventurous travellers can easily find deserted beaches. We took the bus from Oia to the beach at Columbus, where there were few sunbathers, two decent cafés and swimmers can still occasionally hear the volcano rumbling below them.

ugust in Thira is a version of hell, as jostling and crowded as India. thronged with cars and tourists and full of shops, particularly on the Street of Gold, and cafés catering to the day-trippers from the cruise liners. Santorini is not all spoilt, however, and the authorities seem to have out a stop to new building on the rest of the eastern plain. Oia is at the northernmost tip of the island. It is smaller, less crowded, more elegant and less vulgar than Thira, an enchanting village with a narrow centra street, about 6ft wide, with shops, cafés and restaurants on either side, a church and a main square with a baker and a bus station. We walked down the steep cliff at night to the cases at the small port where fish were hauled out of the sea, scaled by your table, freshly grilled and served. A good meal with two bottles of wine for two cost less than £20. By day, we could swim from rocks a short walk from the port round the bot-

Yet, unless you enjoy lazing in the sun with a pile of novels,

Santorini is a confection, an island to visit for only a few days. So we decided to try another Greek island, from one of the smallest to the biggest, and took the short hop to Crete to see if we could find a part that was still unspoilt. We did, very successfully, at Panormo, 55 kilometres west along the coast from Heraklion, once a busy harbour town for exports to Europe that was left behind when the motorways took over from steam railways.

anormo today is what Greece used to be like: a small, unhurried and welcoming village where the men still sat in huddles all morning over their coffee. There were only a few shops and a few restaurants above a small deserted beach. We stayed at the Villa Kynthia, only 200 yards from the sea in the centre of the village, an old family house that has been lovingly restored and which now offers five bedrooms, a shaded courtyard and a small swimming pool and is almost next door to the best tavern in

All the sights of Crete, including Knossos, can be reached easily from here but we had seen them before and decided on an exploration of the mountains behind Panormo. There are parts of Crete that are packed with tourists but if you want solitude, space, grandeur, breathtaking views and the friendliness of tiny villages such as Kastri, the

Highlight of the huilday was the cave in the hills above
Melidoni. It has recently been opened to tourists, though few find it. It was in this vast, underground cave, which still has fragments of pottery from the Minoan era and which has the awesome spaciousness of a cathedral, that 370 villagers attack in 1823 and refused to surrender. All were suffocated when the leader of the Turkish army set fire to the cave's entrance and their remains are in a large grave in the Caribbean: Life on St Barts and St Martin maintains a chic and understated Gallic flavour, even in a hurricane

Blow me down, it could be France s you grow older and a little more world-weary you reach a moment in your life when all you want to do when you go on holiday is just sit on the beach and maybe swim a little. This moment turns out to be when you're three years old. If you happen to be a beach-mad three-year-old with a precocious taste for a little French food and sophistication, you might well consider lolling on a beach on the Côte d'Azur. But if you are a Francophilic three-year-old beach-boy who has a dread of those Côte d'Azur crowds, the French Caribbean may prove to be your paradise. especially because, at three, you're too young to pick up the bar bills. But where? St Barthelemy is as good an introduction as any. St Barts, as it is known, is chic and mostly understated: think of it as the Caribbean's version of the little black dress. It is a Dorian Gray version of France, which stays youthful while the real thing ages.

Unlike most other Caribbean islands there is almost nothing to indicate that St Barts, with its authentic tabacs and boulangeries. isn't somewhere on the French Mediterranean coast. Even the supermarket is a replica of a French original, right down to the imported Brittany tomatoes.

The capital of this tiny island. Gustavia (St Barts was owned by the Swedes for 100 years) has every conturier boutique that the swanki-est French dresser could pine for: Lacroix, Gucci, Versace, Ralph Lauren. Cartier, Bulgari. There is good food on every corner. In L'Iguane, Gustavia even boasts the only sushi restaurant in the West Indies. The only way St Barts could be any more French would be if Sacha Distel personally serenaded you as you strolled through airport

Although small - it takes only an afternoon to drive around the island - St Barts offers refuge to France's rich and famous, from the Rothschilds to Eric Cantona - as well as to Hello! faces such as Diana, Princess of Wales, and her photographer chum Patrick Demarchelier, who has a £3 million villa here (property on St Barts is pricier than in the posh quarters of

It reminds you that nature is even more powerful than Ted Turner and Larry King. Living through a hurricane is what Dr Anthony Clare might call a bonding experience. At the very fancy and very French Guanahani hotel - probably the best hotel on St Barts if spending cash doesn't give you a headache — they maintained an immaculate storm service by delivering freshly baked croissants and tall pots of coffee to all the bungalows (with both waiter and breakfast tray kept dry inside giant bin bags), but around midday we were invited to lunch on the house in the swanky Bartolomeo restaurant. There on the terrace, greeting the guests in his shorts and T-shirt, was M Theze, the general manager, asking how we had fared and filling us in on the weather and damage forecasts. As, one by one, the dining room filled with suddenly gossipy residents, you half-expected M Theze to pray silence and inform us that, "This morning we found that Mme Dubois's jewel casket, containing priceless heirlooms, is missing. We believe it may have been stolen. Possibly, it pains me to add, by a resident. Fortunately, M. Hercule Poirot is staying with us and has offered to help solve the mystery. If

Although the West Indians in the main town of Marigot were celebrating July 14, French Independence Day, as zealously as the expatriate French, the two cultures seem to co-exist rather than blend

Although St Barts is only a small island, it attracts expensive yachts sailed by people who appreciate the designer-label shops into a new ethnic identity.

You can buy a bowl of bull-foot soup yards away from a café selling perfect French onion soup. But you can't find them both on the same menu. Again, the giant Match supermarket is identical to the one you would find in France — ask for a food shop and West Indians invariably direct you to Match, rather than to the stores that sell "our local type of food" — but there is also an open-air market which seems to sell almost nothing but huge hands of plantains.

The Gallic flavour in St Martin is diluted, partly as a concession to visiting Americans, so it's perfect for those who prefer to sip their Frenchness weak. You never know whether to speak French or English; or to pay in francs or dollars, but every taxi driver and barman will convert your bill into either. At Nina's Kitchen, a friendly food shack-cum-café on Marigot's port, you order your fried plantain and goat curry in French, you pay in dollars and you drink Heineken lager (the most noticeable evidence that half the island is Dutch). The beaches on St Martin are from the same textbook paradise as most others in the Caribbean. again with a French accent. At La Samanna — a quietly luxurious hideaway which was once a regular of bigshots such as Nixon, Ford and Onassis, but which (in July at least) seems blissfully bigshot-free - whitewashed cottages spill lazily along the beach in a necklace. Tear yourself away occasionally for dinner in Marigot. Even better, drive a little further round the bay to a pretty stretch called Grand Gase, which is lined with colourful restaurants and bars and shacks serving cheap barbecues.

You can slope off from all this to the casinos and the shopping malls on the brasher, Dutch side of the island, which is frequented by the shopaholic passengers from the direct jumbo flights from Paris and Amsterdam. But then, why would

Cuba: The old communist warhorse may be creaking but there's no shortage of atmosphere to soak up

or connoisseurs of decay there is nothing to beat Havana. Even the remotest corners of the former Soviet Union received a lick of paint as recently as 1989, but in Cuba time stopped in 1959. The ancient Chevys and Plymouths trundling down the mostly empty streets aren't tourist attractions. They are the latest models, apart from a handful of ageless Ladas. The American vendetta hasn't made life easy for Cuba's inhabitants but that was more than offset by Soviet subsidies. Yet Cuba seems on its knees, You don't need to study trade figures: just stand in the street and observe the inertia.

It's still a fascinating place, even if it is crumbling. Buildings sometimes collapse from ill health. Those still standing are laded and peeling. The benches lack slats, lampstands lack bulbs. Yet Havana is wonderfully grand, for all that. After the dinkiness of other Caribbean capitals such as Nassau or St Pierre, it's wonderful to walk along boulevards as spacious as anything in Mexico City.

Havana is filled with reminders of its former grandeur, such as the flamboyant Gran Teatro, the Art Deco-Baccardi building, the dramatic curve of shoreline called the Malecon. It's a city of boulevards, domed public buildings, harbour fortifications, villas, lofty palms, Bellas Arte excesses Along the Prado, the once fashionable shady promenade linking the Parque Central and the waterfront, marble paths and ornate stone benches are flanked by houses in styles from neo-baroque to Moorish and classical. By day, schoolchildren are put through their gymnastic paces. By night, sex tourists prowi.

Indeed, night gives Havana a medieval atmosphere. The streets are dimly lit, when lit at all. Figures lurk in doorways not threateningly, but because they have nothing else to do and it's usually too hot to retreat indoors. At floodlit round-the-clock buildings sites in Old Havana, joint-venture companies are racing to put up new hotels to accommodate the million or more tourists expected here in 1997. Prostitutes lurk near the hotels, but they now risk a long prison sentence, so their numbers have been reduced to a trickle.

To some extent Havana's dilapidation is the source of its charm: so many old city centres elsewhere have been restored to death. But the underside of the picturesque in Havana is the privation of its inhabitants. Cuba must be one of the most fertile places on earth; you wouldn't know it from looking at the shops. What's for sale is what nobody wants to buy. The few markets have little to offer other than oranges, bananas and sweet potatoes. The patriotic slogans with which the country is emblazoned "Revolution with Fidel!"

"Che. Your Ideas Live On!") cannot disguise national failure. Cafeterias have no food, a beer costs a week's wages. If you have dollars, of course, it's different story.

Visitors flock into Old Havana. Its main thoroughfare. Obispo, passes splendid 19thcentury pharmacies, the impalazzi of defunct awful handicrafts hotels. shops fall Cuban souvenirs are tatty), cafes, bookshops, and La Floridita, a Hemingway haunt that is now Cuba's priciest restaurant.

Obispo emerges into the Plaza de Armas, a flower-filled square dominated by the magnificent Spanish-colonial mu nicipal palace and a moated castle. Near by, the cathedral square is packed with souvenir stalls and roving musicians. No tourist escapes the Boguedita del Medio, the cramped bar (and overpriced restaurant) where Hemingway drank mojitos. I made my sole concession to the Hemingway cult and dutifully ordered mine: a refreshing blend of lime juice, mint, soda water, sugar, ice and rum.

There's greater calm south of the Plaza de Armas, where few restorers or hoteliers have ventured, where women with their hair in rollers eye the few passers by, where laundry sails across balconies with cracked shutters, and where decayed courtyards are home to dozens of families.

ot all of Havana is squalid. The once smart residential districts of Vedado and Miramar are still filled with villas and mansions, some derelict, others used as embassies or institutes. Insiders know that here you will find the best restaurants. shops and discos. There's little to see in the way of historical monuments. but now, as 50 years ago, this. rather than Old Havana, is the place to live. Since public transport is non-existent or hopelessly overcrowded, the only practi cal way to explore Cuba is by car. Many visitors have to pay a bribe to obtain one. I had to collect my car a day earlier than I needed it - which comes to the same thing.

I sped out of Havana past the eastern beaches and malodorous oilfields. It was amazingly hot: snakes slithered across the roads leading towards the old colonial town of Trinidad. A bus ahead of me drove over a pig. which squealed its last. A car whacked a goat into eternity. Considering how few vehicles there were on the road, this was quite a toll of valued domestic animals.

There followed three hours of mountain driving, mostly in total darkness over seriously potholed roads. A flat tyre up here and I would be spending the night in the car. But I eventually made it to Trinidad. I stayed at the tranquil Las Cuevas Motel, an attractive collection of hillside bungalows - I shared mine with an amiable frog - and, after dinner, wandered through the old town, where people promenaded through the square. The next day, I explored its churches (packed for Mass), cobbled lanes, and mansions converted into historical museums. Along the streets, tall grilled windows allowed glimpses into spacious, wellventilated living areas with patios behind. The Trinidadians may be impoverished but they live in style.

When Fidel eventually lets slip the reins of power, all bets, politically, are off. But it's fair to assume that this creaking old communist warhorse will be swiftly dismantled, the most gifted and cultured people in the Caribbean will once again be free to express themselves, the coastline will be ruthlessly exploited by mass tourism, empty highways will be jammed with tour buses, and those of us who had the fortune to visit Cuba in its final, sleazy, atmospheric days, will mutter: "It's not what it was." But life will be better for the Cubans, and that's a price that I will happily pay.

Guests at Ynyshir Hall in Powys can enjoy superh food and even take the dog along

The ultimate bedside manor

BRITAIN'S festivals are increasingly organised Valentine weekends, with all affected by the extension factor. Christmas now lasts a fortnight. Easter can be Day, which falls on a Friday in 1997 ty, a number of Britain's hoteliers have weekend of the year?

the smoothy extras: the welcome champagne, the four-poster bed, the red rose on extended to a week and St Valentine's the pillow and - in lieu of the blindfolded violinist - a tinkling piano. Some even nominated by the AA as "the Year of have a touch of humour. Here are a Romance", honestly - can be stretched to selection of romantic breaks - but who a full weekend. Leaping at this opportuni- said they had to be restricted to one

ENGLAND

LANGSHOTT MANOR (01293 786680), a loth-century country house near Gatwick, propose a Liaison Dangereuse Valentine's Night for two, dinner, bed and breakfast, plus a gift of Dartington crystal, for £205. Dancing cheek-to-cheek can take place during the Valentine's night dance at the Runnymede Hotel on the banks of the Thames at Egham, Surrey (01784 436171). Extras include wine on arrival and use of the hotel spa, all for £75, per head, per night, dinner and dance included. The Lake District is always romantic and the Rothay Garden Hotel at Grasmere (015394 35334) offers a Valentine package, with half-tester or four-poster beds, a basket of flowers and the obligatory champagne on arrival, plus chocolates and a full fivecourse dinner, for £86 per head per night. Romance is on offer at the Rampsbeck Country House Hotel on Ullswater. the prefect base for romantic strolls, right on the edge of the lake. Prices from £65 per night, including dinner; reservations from Crystal Britain on 0181-390 $515. Those who prefer towns can spend a Valentine's Weekend in the romantic city of Chester where the Chester Grosvenor Hotel (01244 324024) offers a Romantic Weekend With Your True Love, starting with a champagne reception. followed by a dinner for two.

serenaded by a classical guitarist in the La Brassière restaurant - plus a heartshaped box of truffles. Prices from £70 per head, per night. for two nights.

Moving south, the Angel Hotel in Midhurst, Sussex (01730 S12421) is offering dinner in its excellent Cowdray restaurant on Valentine's Day. as part of a weekend package. at prices from £02.50 per person per night. A pianist will play and four-poster beds are available. The Hotel de la Bere, at Southam near Cheltenham (01242 237771) has a two-night Valentine's Break. with chocolates on arrival, pre-dinner cocktails, a candlelit dinner, champagne and a red rose on the pillow later. plus breakfast in bed next morning - and a 4pm check out on Sunday; all this at £199 for two people, for two nights.

Cornwall can offer a weekend at the Well House Hotel (01579 342001) at St Keyne near Liskeard, where the nearby well has magic powers; the first partner in a marriage to drink from the well will attain mastery in the relationship and rule the roost thereafter. Worrying, but well worth a Valentine weekend at prices from £240 per couple. for two nights, with Dinner for Lovers, bed, and breakfast. Devon romantics need look no further than beautiful Lewtrenchard Manor hotel at Lewdown near Okehampton (01566 78325b). An oak-panelled dining room, superb food, log fires, roomy bedrooms and glorious Devon in every direction and a special Valentine's weekend rate for two of £242.50 for two nights.

plus a Valentine's dinner. London's hotels are also rising to the challenge - at a price. Brown's Hotel in Mayfair offers a Valentine Weekend at $790 per couple, with breakfast and one dinner. champagne, a dozen roses. tickets to a show and shopping "privileges" at shops like Charbonnel & Walker. The Franklin Hotel in Knightsbridge (0171-584 5533) - voted London's Most Romantic Hotel hy an American magazine for its beautiful rooms and setting in a tree-lined square offers a double room, champagne, and a Valentine's breakfast, for £200, while the Portobello Hotel in Notting Hill (017)-727 2777). which claims to have the sexiest bedrooms in London, is proposing a Wickedly Wicked Valentine's Weekend, with the statutory champagne, a Liner's Breakfast and a "naugh-

Valentine present for £185. Guests at the elegant Goring Hotel in Victoria can invite the planist to play love songs on Valentine's night and since George Goring, that most amiable of hosts, adores sheep and features life-sized toy sheep in the decor, musical requests are invited with an ovine theme: It Had to be Ewc. Wool Meet Again, and soon. Prices from £250 per night, per couple, include champagne and dinner and a toy sheep in every bedroom on request Details from the Goring Hotel on (U)7)-396 9000).

NORTHERN IRELAND LOVERS seeking to affirm

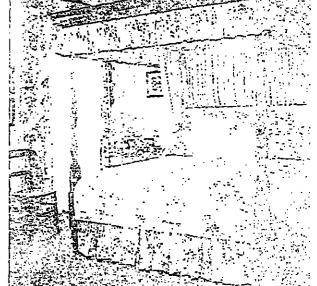

their love should head for the Celtic Love Stone in County Antrim. This Bronze Age stone bestows never-ending love on every couple who shake hands through the hole that pierces it. That done, head for the nearby Dunadry Hotel and Country Club at Templepatrick, the ideal base for a romantic Valentine's break at £92.50 per head, for two nights, including a special romantic dunner. Reservations: 01349 432474. The Slieve Donard Hotel at Newcastle in Co. Down (013967 23681) has a special Valentine's weekend break, dinner bed and breakfast and the usual entertainment, while the old and romantic Londonderry Arms Hotel 101574 8352551 on the Antrim coast near the Giant's Consessor offers a bargain Valentine's break, 105 for two nights and a special dinner on February 14.

CHANNEL ISLANDS THE MAYFAIR Hotel, St.

Helier, Jersey, is offering a two-night Valentine Weekend break, including return caramaran crossing from Wey-mouth from 26%, or by air from £115. Romantic joys here include a special dinner with dishes like Heartbeat Halibut and Cuddle-up Cheeses. If you can survive these and uncurl your toes, you can frolic in the indoor pool, Reservations: 01534 59529.

Tie up the red tape in advance

HOLIDAYMAKERS taking up last minute bargains to long haul destinations such as the Gambia. Kenya and India, can face unforeseen health and visa problems.

The Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine advises a visit to your GP at least a month before departure to phase in the necessary vaccinations and malaria precautions. The school operates a Travel Health Advice Line (089) 172[1]; 45p a minute off-peak, 50p at other times).

The red tape involved in acquiring visus is highlighted by Holiday Which?. Although many countries will issue visas on the same day from their visa section, almost invariably in London, to those prepared to come in person and queue, postal applications to such countries as India, China and Russia can take up to a month. If you fail to allow enough time to get your visa, you may risk forfeiting your "bargain".

The alternative is to pay £40 or more to a visa agency to procure it in time. For many countries, your passport must be valid for at least six, in some cases 12, months on the day of your arrival.

gogue, and Seville.

The tour costs from £1,058 per person including flights, car hire, and B&B at paradors en route.

Bird island

CORSICA's spectacular mountains, meadows and maquis harbour numerous endemic plant and bird species, many of which can hopefully be spotted on Naturetrek's eight-day spring bird-watching and botanical tour (01962 733051).

Full-board accommodation is provided in mountain auberges in the hilltop villages of Evisa, and in the valley of La Restorica in the heart of the Corsican National Park from which holidaymakers set out on walks each day in the company of experts, binoculars at the ready. The price, with flights included, is £890.

Majorcan gems

WITH THE exception of a few overdeveloped resorts on the east coast and either side of Palma (itself a delightful little capital), the much underrated island of Majorca can provide some of the best holidays in the Mediterranean. Deep in the interior and tucked away in tiny hamlets, specialist Castaways (01737 812255) offers country manors and village houses, many with their own pools, and private transport from the airport.

Dating back to 1242, La Reserva Rotana belonged to the Majorcan family of the Marquis de Villalonga, and as well as a pool and tennis court, it has its own private ninehole golf course with a pro. A week's B&B (with flight) costs from £909 per person.

A simpler converted village house, the Hotel d'Es Puig men-tioned by Robert Graves, in the late poet's hideaway of Deia, costs from £479 a week B&B with flights.

TWENTY years after the muchloved Union Castle ships ended their 120-year long sailings to South Africa, the RMS St Helena, a working ship that carries mail and cargo, plus 128 passengers, will create the final voyage of RMS Windsor Castle.

On August 7 southbound and September 20 northbound, the St Helena will sail between Cardiff and Cape Town, via Tenerife, the Ascension Islands and St Helena, Napoleon's last home in exile. The three-week voyages to or from Cape Town cost from £2,865 per person including the one-way flight. Details | French National Tourist Office (0891 | iwe. Plans for 1999

WHAT WILL you be doing on December 31, 1999? Abercrombie & Kent (0171-730 9600) has issued a Millennium brochure. Each of its holidays includes a gala evening on December 31, 1999, and locations range from Jack's Camp in the Kalahari Desert to a cruise round the Galapagos Islands. A 14-night Great Africa Air Cruise will begin in Egypt, continuing through Zimba-

Falls: it costs about £11,500. The millennium can also be welcomed at the Taj Mahal on a seven-night tour featuring the highlights of Moghul India, costing about £1.496.

Ski insurance

TAKING out insurance for a skiing holiday can have its pitfalls. For information on what to look for in a policy and the most common exclusions - snowboarding, for example. may not be covered - see Weekend Money, pages 46-47.

Taking the Mickey?

Disney on the Sun-V V day last autumn that spanned both the English and French half-term holidays. The weather was overcast and there was little lustre about the Magic Kingdom. The train from Paris was reassuringly quiet. Those heading for Disney were. surprisingly, mainly adults without children. Not so when we reached the entrance to the park itself. There the crowds were thronging, the air filled with European tongues. Passage through the turnstiles was swift and efficient, but the crowds heading for the vari-ous rides were rush-hour thick. We needed a warming coffee. The nearest restaurant had queues (in the filter pens) of great length and complex-in. We managed to get some coffee from an outdoor kinsk but even then a 15-minute wait in the rain was required. For our ten-year-old son.

this much-postponed visit had been the source of eager anticipation. I could see he was going quieter and gloomier with the growing realisa-tion that EuroDisney was most unlikely to fulfil its promise. He has been a railway buff since the age of four and wanted to ride on the track that circles the park. We tried the Main Street Station. Closed, We asked why, "Only for today", with a shrug of Gallic insouciance.

is other interest was children can drive small racing cars round and round. Also closed. We were not heartened to learn that the alleged refurbishment was necessary for our future enjoyment. The park's most sought-after attraction is Space Mountain. Not only could we not join the queue for it but the sheer press of people meant we could not even find where the queue began. What about the Mysteries of Nautilus next door? A roped-off section fed people into the filtering pens and a notice told us that from that point we could expect to wait 15 minutes to enter. However. that did not take account of people waiting to enter the guidance from an attendant. Yes, he agreed, it was unlikely that waiting time for any attraction would be less than half an hour. Had we considered the Visionarium? The queue there was not really as bad as it looked. What was the Visionarium? He mumbled something about Michael Jackson on a huge screen. We had paid Fr420 (£46) for the day. We were expected to queue for up to an hour to gain entry to any attraction on offer. For most of the waiting time we would be subject to the wet autumn weather.

We decided to ask for our money back and went to the "hospitality" desk in City Hall. Our request was quietly but firmly stated. We had paid for a range of services that had been advertised. We had done so in the expectation that we could gain reasonable access to those services. We did not think a series of very long waits represented reasonable access: refund our money, please. Not possible, we were told. it states on the back of the ticket that no refunds are possible. But we could not know that until we actually bought the ticket, we protested. A small crowd was listening as we reiterated our demand, adding that had Disney publicised the estimated waiting times we would never have bought the ticket in the first place. Our voices remained calm but we were insistent. Then a presumably even higher manager conceded Mickey's case. He credited us with the Fr420 and waved us off the park.

26 Qxf4+ Rxf4 Z7 Ne2 Re4 28 b3 Mark Hebden scored perhaps the best result of his life when he shared joint first prize in Britain's premier tournament at Hastings. He distinguished himself by beating both John Nunn and Michael Adams. Here is how he overcame Britain's number two player.

preparation. Black's queen's bishop has been driven out of play and White also enjoys a spatial advantage. Yet White has been obliged to loosen his own pawn structure. It is on this that Black bases his hopes. 8 Bg5 Be7 9 h4 h5. White's threat of h5 makes this necessary. 10 Bxd6 gxd6 11 Bh3 hxg4 12 Bxg4 d5 13 exd5 cxd5 14 h5 Bh7 \15 Rg1 Nc6 16 0-0-0 Qc7

A plausible move which maintains the possibility of castling queenside for Black. After the game, however, 16 . . . Rc8 was recommended with the possible counter-attacking plan . Qa5 and ... Nb4.

17 Bh3 Qf4+ 18 Kb1 Bf5. It is a hame to trade this powerful pishop which is aligned menacingly against White's king. Black's motivation was doubtless to avoid any sacrifice by White against e6 and to undermine the defences of White's pawn on h5.

The psychology of this game is interesting. If Black were to mark time, White could not break through, but with an extra pawn Black feels he must still play for the full point. In so doing he underestimates White's scope.

(i) What would you bid?
(ii) If you bid a direct Four Spades, your left-hand opponent bids Five

At the table, Andrew Robson thought the balance of probabilities

was that his partner had psyched and so bid only Four Spades. He then passed Five Clubs doubled.

Do you pass or bid?

◆ K 6 2 ⊕AJ109542

Tony Forrester (West) had tried an old-fashioned psyche. At first it seemed he had scored a fine result. Five Clubs Doubled went three down for 800 to East-West. At the other table East opened Four Spades after two passes, and Jason Hackett had the sense to pass on

by Robert Sheehan

objected to Robson's actions. There's nothing wrong with psyching. ... as long as it contains the same element of surprise for the. psycher's partner as it does for the opponents" (a quote from the English Bridge Union's brochure on the subject). But the TD ruled that Robson's bid of Four Spades, was "fielding". That implied that he and Forrester had "an unauthorised -.. and therefore illegal — understanding". I don't see it that way: the opponents also knew that, at the state of the match and the prevailing vulnerability. East-West would: be quite likely to try to mix it up. But TD's often interpret this law in a restrictive way — they rule that you are only permitted to assume your partner has psyched if: there is direct evidence that he has done so.

The TD cancelled the board, and gave the other team 5 IMPs. If that was going to be the ruling-Robson was unwise to bid Four Spades - if it got a good result opposite a psyche it wouldn't stand, and if his partner had a genuine spade opener he might miss a To pass Five Clubs Doubled is clearly the right action — if West has a minimum but genuine One Snade opener with strength in clubs, you expect to get a good penalty out of Five Clubs, and you may fail in Five Spades.

FEW THINGS seem quite as rewarding as getting Toy Story's pull-string cowboy Woody to do his intoxicating dance of delight around in a circle. His jolly jitterbug is a magic moment from the Disney cartoon and it is also caught perfectly, acting as a scrumptious donkey's carrot, when you complete any of the 17 levels of Disney Interactive's Toy Story CD-Rom for Windows.

Mirroring the plotline of the film. Woody et al come to life in their magical world when adults aren't around. Woody, favourite toy of young Andy, falls out with the newcomer in toyland, Buzz Lightyear.

and Buzz make up and, with the help of the other toys, take on evil Sid, the toy-torturing boy who lives next door, then make it back to the safety of Andy's bedroom. The graphics in the game are superlative — comfortably large and uncluttered. After helping Woody to jump, duck, dive, bounce boosts health. Most levels usually take two or three attempts to complete successfully and there is never a dull moment. Toy Story CD-Rom is intended for players aged eight and up and, thanks to great clarity in the instructions, even the youngest of users could easily install it.

This CD-Rom version is an adaptation of the Toy Story game first released for 16-bit consoles, such as Nintendo's SNES. A similarly adapted Disney title is Donald in Cold Shadow, a platform game starring the duck and now out on Windows CD-Rom, having originally ap-peared as the 16-bit console game

Donald in Maui Mallard. With rich, colourful graphics, the action is fast-paced as you energeti-cally guide Donald through 23 levels in his bid to save an island paradise from destruction. The settings, which swim with detail, include the bottom of the sea, magical underworlds, volcanoes

ing grounds where you learn how to morph Donald into a mighty Ninja warrior. It is also aimed at players aged eight and up. While Disney has released several titles for lesser games consoles, so far it has only released one for the Sony PlayStation - Mickey's Wild Adventure. This must have seemed a great idea on paper but Men platoon, heavyweight wres- and the all-important Ninja train- although the end product looks dreamy, the platform action engages poorly. Mickey's Wild Adventure borrows a mish-mash of scenes from Mickey's more memorable film credits, like Steamboat Willie, The Mad Doctor, Lonesome Ghosts, Moose Hunters and The Prince and the Pauper.

three runners-up was no mean feat. Our three runners-up, who win Psion Siena organisers, were L Mactavish of Romney Marsh, Kent, S. Welch of Stockport, Cheshire, and N. Salter of Thame, Oxon. Their tips have already appeared in earlier columns. Our overall winner is Gary Mason of St Albans,

He wins an AST Advantage 9306, worth £2,799, which features a 200 MHz Intel Pentium processor. 32 Mb EDO Ram and 3 Gb hard-disc plus a package of starter software. The Psion Siena palmtops, worth £229 each, have a full I Mb memory and boast comprehensive organiser features such as diary, telephone book and spread sheet.

Thank you to all who entered Cyberspace Twenty-Nine. By way of consolation to those of you whose entries were felt by the judges to be worthy of honourable mention, we will continue running more of your Microsoft catalogue.

Staying with competition news, a jeroboam of Moet & Chandon champagne is on its way to our end of year quiz winner. Richard Gib-son of Winchester and, coming soon, readers will be able to win a top-of-the-range Polaroid digital camera.

Hong Kong's next chief defends curbs on rights

FROM JONATHAN MIRSKY IN HONG KONG

THE truce, barely five weeks old, has ended between the Hong Kong government and Tung Chee-hwa, nominated by Peking to be chief executive after the transfer of sovereignry in July.

AUSTRALIA'S love affair with the kangaroo, the koala and the emu appears to be over. The three quintessentially Australian symbols, which have done so much to sell the country's image to the rest of the world, have effectively been told to hop it.

When Sydney hosts the Olympic Games in 2000, three new mascots will epitomise the land down under.

Yesterday they were revealed as Syd. the duck-billed platypus, Olly the laughing kookaburra and Millie the

School for scandal thriving in Japan

IN TOKYO

A NEW term is about to start at the "Sexy-Up School", a vocational college with an unusual curriculum. The college, in Osaka, west ern Japan offers courses in the sex industry, a relatively thriving sector of the stagnant Japanese economy. Despite its provocative name, reflecting a common Japanese belief that mangled English words are cool, the Sexy-Up School has a serious and practical purpose. "Many girls are attracted to the sex industry by the good money, but they have no sense of style and no manners," said Yasuo Taniyama, the princi-pal. Our aim is to instil a feeling of professional pride." He believes many of today's young women are too casual in their dress, too sloppy in their speech, and lamentably ignorant of the traditional courtesan's arts of pleasing men. So the curriculum is rigorous.

Students must attend 30 hours a month of courses that include general etiquette, the art of conversation, make-up, the present place of the sex industry in Japanese society, the status and income of the adult video actress, and the importance of proper sexual performance.

Ninety-three women who raduated last year quickly found jobs in hostess bars. striptease theatres, adult films, or what are delicately known here as "fashion health salons". In contrast to the labour market as a whole, where unemployment is rising, there appears to be no shortage of opportunities in the sex industry.

Enrolment figures for the new term are high: in a country that sets great store by academic qualifications, a di-ploma in sex industry studies confers a certain status. But not all graduates will hang theirs on the wall.

"Not all our students intend to become professional fuzo-kujo (literally, women in the public morals trade)." Mr Taniyama said, "We also have secretaries and housewives who want to learn how to improve their sex appeal."

One graduate with a fullname was Mari, added that she had not told her boyfriend about her studies. "I wanted to learn how to express the sensuality within me. And I've achieved it. My boyfriend finds me more stimulating company now."

FROM TOM RHODES IN WASHINGTON

AN AVERAGE of 15,000 Americans write to President Clinton every day but only those bearing one of two magic numbers can be certain to reach the Oval Office.

These "Dear Bill" letters are part of a private epistolary brains trust that Mr Clinton has established with his oldest friends and earliest

At a time when Washington is obsessed by questions of access to the President, particularly from Asian donors to the Democratic Party, this small cadre of loyalists provides perhaps the most telling insight into how this President tests the waters in his nation.

They are the chosen few who have been given a secret nine-digit post code and a personal fax number, the only group of American citizens who can honestly say they have a direct line to Mr Clinton and his policy. Any letter bearing the secret "zip" code is quickly removed from the daily pile in the White House post room and placed under the President's door. The faxes that spew into the small cubbyhole next to the Oval Office are swiftly rushed to his desk. When Carolyn Staley, the preach-

er's daughter raised in the house next to Billy Clinton, wanted to rebuke the President last spring, she sent a fax. Mrs Staley, now deputy director of the National Institute for Literacy, said the Clinton budget would reduce spending on adult literacy to below the levels of the Bush Administration. Within hours she had a call from a budget analyst, and adult education pro-grammes are now scheduled to receive a $95 million injection in this year's presidential budget.

Earlier this month, when the Supreme Court was hearing arguments in the sexual harassment suit brought against Mr Clinton by Paula Jones, a former Arkansas state employee, Mrs Staley sent condolences to her old friend.

"At some level this is killing him," Republican joins Cabinet

liam Cohen of Maine was sworn in as Defence Secretary yesterday to become the first Republican to serve in a Clinton Cabinet. He succeeds William Perry.

President Clinton said the Senate's 99-0 vote to confirm Mr Cohen "sent a strong signal of its san spirit to preserve and enhance our national security. Bill Cohen is the embodiment of that spirit." Mr Cohen said he looked forward to serving to a new century with clarity of purpose". (AP)

she said. "He wishes he could walk out, just casually up and down the street, and have people come up to him and talk about what they're thinking ... We try to keep him on target. We're real people. We're real salt of the earth, blue collar, no silver spoon in the mouth."

Another who stays in contact is David Leopoulos, a chum from elementary school who is now a travelling computer software salesman. He will send as many as three faxes a week from his laptop on subjects from the North American Free Trade Agreement to what he has heard on radio talk-shows around the country.

Philip Jamison, in his class at Georgetown University and a Vietnam veteran, told the President that normalising relations with that country was a good thing. Mauria Aspell, the only other non-Catholic at St John's parish school in Hot Springs, Arkansas, is another correspondent; Tommy Caplan, an au-thor who sometimes works on speeches, is one, too. "He contacts them afterwards by

"It's all part of the 2lst-century
outreach. If Al Gore becomes president he will probably have his own e-mail and personal website."

Poring over these missives, between 100 and 500 a week, is said to be an indispensable part of Mr Clinton's private time, the three to four hours that have been built into his daily schedule by Erskine

Canadian trappers cash in on fad for fur

A SALE of furs opened in Toronto yesterday and is expected to provoke protests by animal rights activists around the world. More than 100,000 pelts are expected to he sold this weekend after a return to popularity for fur garments.

Alison Beal, of the Fur
Institute of Canada, said the demand was being driven by fashion designers and the fashion press in New York.

The sudden resurgence of popularity of furs, which had been in steady decline for the past ten years, is attributed in large part to the prominence given furs in Vogue magazine and other fashion publica-

More than 80 per cent of the furs sold in Toronto this weekend will find their way to New York.

Only a year ago fur sales were so depressed that the annual June fur auction in ending a tradition that went back almost 200 years.

The new-found popularity is a bonanza for Canadian trappers, most of whom are aboriginal people living in remote areas of northern Canada for whom there is little else by way of work.

In poor years, a beaver skin will fetch $80 (£49) for a trapper, double that for an ordinary fox pelt. But when furs are rare the market can fluctuate and even a modest beaver peit can fetch $200.

THE Pope yesterday accused the world's media of mocking religious believers by portraying them in a bad light and bombarding the young with "unwholesome images", rather than reinforcing moral values in the run-up to the millennium. He also said he sympathised with the "sufferings of divorced people", but said remarriage after divorce

constituted "moral disorder". In a message for World Communications Day, the Pope said the global explosion of information technology had given people "an ever-growing choice of sources ... but the greater the choice, the harder it may be to choose responsiwas increasingly diffi cult to "protect one's eyes and ears from images and sounds which arrive through the media unexpectedly and uninvited". The media reached families "including very young children ... What way

do the media point to? What truth do they propose? What life do they offer? Parents found it especially

hard to guard their children from unwholesome messages, the Pope said, and it was "shocking how easily advanced communication technologies can be exploited by those whose intentions are evil". The Vatican has shown growing concern over sex and violence on television, and pornography on the Internet.

The Pope said many people in the Third World aspired to new technology, but were concerned about "domination of the media by so-called Western culture ... Media products are seen as in some v representing values that the West holds dear ... The truth may well be that the foremost value they really represent is commercial profit.

aspirations or were morally unlifting and helped people to lead better lives were decreasing. "It is not easy to remain optimistic about the positive influence of the media when they appear either to ignore the vital role of religion in people's lives or to mock

religious belief." Speaking at the end of a Vatican conference on the family, the Pope said the Church could "not be indifferent to the painful problem" of divorce and remarriage. The task of the Church was to deal with family disintegration through "pastoral care consis-tent with Christ's teaching".

The Pope's guardian of doctrinal purity. Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, yesterday also upheld the ban on the ordination of women. But he surprised observers by decreeing that those who advocated women Programmes which dealt priests were guilty of "an error" rather than "heresy".

of the holy month of Ramadan

The bloodletting reflects an increasingly brutal policy by the Armed Islamic Group (GIA), the most militant of the fundamentalist groups fightng to topple the militarybacked Government.

Breaking a long silence President Zeroual of Algeria. a former general, was due to address the nation last night and was expected to emphasise his determination to fight terrorism and discuss a forthcoming election.

Just two weeks ago government ministers were claiming that the extremists had been vanquished, but the latest killings stands in stark contraclaims that it faced only "residual terrorism". An estimated 60,000 people have died in the carriage since 1992 when the military moved to cancel elections which the fundamentalists were poised to win.
This week the country's principal secular opposition

warned that Algeria was spiralling into total chaos and called on the United States to appoint a mediator to try to end the bloodshed. Hocine Ait Ahmad accused France, Algeria's former colonial ruler, of callous indifference to a death toll he put at 100,000, and he urged President Clinton to select a peace negotiator who might "unblock the situation". Morocco launches drive to quell Islamic students

By Tunku Varadarajan

ALARMED by an epidemic of Islamic fundamentalism among university students in Casablanca, and unnerved by the daily violence which scars neighbouring Algeria, the Moroccan Government has launched its most determined crackdown this decade against Muslim extremists.

Up to 100 student militants have been detained in the past few days at the Muhammad V University in Casablanca, the main breeding ground for Islamic radicals. The university has been in a state of ferment since the New Year, with boycotts of classes and confrontations with police. With about 30,000 stu-- the majority with few prospects of employment — it is a fieldom of the banned al-Adl wa al-Ihsan (Justice and Spirituality) party.

The Government's crackdown began on January 10, when police arrested three leaders of the Union Nationale des Etudiants Marocains, charging them with threatening public order, attacking policemen and damaging public property.

On Tuesday, the three were sentenced to prison terms ranging from one to three years by a tribunal in Ain Choc in Casablanca, after a trial which their lawyers described as "totally in breach of basic legal procedures".

There are at least 33 other student activists awaiting trial. The arrests followed several days of student strikes and demonstrations in Casablanca, ostensibly in protest against poor housing and transport. Yet the protests - which coincided with the seventh anniversary of the house arrest of Abdesslame Yassine, Justice and Spirituality leader - were also used to air opposition to the regime of King Hassan.

Greek who found 'Alexander's tomb' barred by Egypt

A GREEK archaeologist who claimed to have found the tomb of Alexander the Great has had her licence to excavate in Egypt revoked.

Liana Souvaltzi announced in 1995 that she had found the tomb at Siwa oasis in northwestern Egypt, but Greek and Egyptian archaeologists dised her claims.

Ali Hassan, the secretary general of the state's Supreme Council for Antiquities, said that not one of 22 specialists had a good word to say about the methods of her mission, which was suspended in October pending an inquiry.

The system was one of the worst in the field of archaeology. The experts studied it for six hours and at the end none. of them said even Give her a chance'. They said it has to be stopped," Mr Hassan said. The report of the inquiry was one of the worst I have ever seen, on the methods, on the recording, on photogra-phy, on jumping from one place to another as if hunting,"

No wise archaeologist declares the result of his excavations before reaching the end This is not archaeology. this is political propaganda. It has nothing to do with science." Ms Souvaltzi's team had broken up the inscription it presented as evidence that the tomb was Alexander's, moving the pieces around to try to suit their reading of it, he

Ms Souvaltzi called the Egyptian charges "wretched lies" adding: "I reject all decisions and conclusions, and my revelations will be made through the courts."

Meanwhile, Mr Hassan has announced that the Sphinx at Giza is on the road to recovery after six years of extensive restorations. "I can say that within a few months the Sphinx ... will not be m intensive care any more," he

He also announced plans to open 20 new museums, and said Egypt should not try to force countries such as Britain. Germany and the United States to hand back Egyptian relics. As long as we do not have the facilities to ensure these pieces can be well displayed ... it would be better to_ keep these treasures in the museums of the world to ensure they get as much good-publicity for Egypt as pos-

Steffi Graf's father given jail term for tax fraud

FROM ROGER BOYES IN BONN

THE father of Steffi Graf, the world's top rated woman tennis player, was freed pending an appeal after being sentenced yesterday to three years and nine months in jail as part of a German crackdown on celebrity tax evaders.

Peter Graf, who coached and managed his daughter for many years, looked shaken as he was led out of the courtroom in Mannheim, southwest Germany.

Graf had been charged. along with the family financial adviser, of steering some £14 million of Steffi Graf's sponsorship earnings into foreign accounts and thus illegally shielding around £7 million from the German taxman. Judge Joachim Plass said there was no evidence that Steffi Graf herself was actively involved in tax evasion. One witness had reported a family meeting attended by the tennis player, in which tax shelters had been discussed. But Steffi who was questioned by inters last year, denied sanity of the meeting and suessed that all financial affairs were run by her father. The player was on a flight to Tokyo as news reached her of the verdict. She had been recovering in Melbourne from injury and illness after her shock defeat in the fourth round of the Australian Tennis Open last Sunday. "One of the most important thing for us and the Graf

family is that the court wants prosecutors to close the files in the case of Stefanie Graf." said her father's defence lawyer. Friends said the player was relieved that the case was over but was concerned about her lather's probable return to jail. The defence team had pleaded for a suspended two-year sentence and a fine, a move that would have effectively freed Graf, who spent 15 months in pre-trial detention. Unless an appeal is upheld Graf will have to return to prison for at least 14 months. Taking into account the pre-trial arrest and a likely remission of sentence, he should be free

PETER GRAF, father of one of the most successful woman tennis players of modern times, was yesterday sitting behind the high walls of the family villa in Bruehl contemplating a broken career.

The guilty verdict on tax evasion charges marks a watershed not only for the 58year-old former used car salesman — who lived for and through his daughter Steffi but also for Germany. For Germans. Stelfi was the model of a sports heroine and many had hoped that she would also have a model family.

Football-crazy minister tackles stick-in-the-mud bureaucrats of the art world

ONE MAN is increasingly appearing on Italian television as the front man of the ruling nine-month centre-left coalition to soothe growing anxieties over Europe and the economy: Walter Veltront. the boyish, bespectacled Deputy Prime Minister and former Communist.

At 41, the former journalist and film critic is Italy's youngest Cabinet minister. Much given to open-neck buttondown shirts, he is a child of 1968 and even wrote a book called The Dream of the Sixties. He went to film school in Rome his home town - after making his first film when to; it was shown, somewhat to his embarrassment, on prime-time TV this week. Author of a best-selling study of Robert Kennedy, he is working on a novel set in the unlikely world of professional swimming (Jilly Cooper. take note) for which he jots down notes during meetings. He is also an ardent football fan and amateur player.

As editor of L'Unità, formerly the Communist Party paper and now the

Married with two daughters, he has gradually shed his youthful Marxism, although not his idealism, and remains an ardent Catholic close to Cardinal Carlo Maria Martini, the left-leaning Archbishop of Milan. When the former Communists entered Government in May for the first time since the Second World War. Signor Veltroni became deputy to Professor Romano Prodí. the Prime Minister, but insisted on the Culture portfolio to "bring fresh air" into a stagnating cultural est-museums or classical sites open only at limited times, with little information and few modern techniques to bring the past alive. "Many do not even have a decent bookshop," Signor Veltroni says. Corriere della Sera this week accused him of being interested mainly in "photo opportunities and Big Events", enjoying the company of Italy's glitterati and going off to Paris to promote Franco-Italian film productions while Italy's libraries and propugations followed: libraries and monuments fall apart.

Signor Veltroni retorts that in less than a year he has boosted financial support for "heritage sites", partly by encouraging private sponsorship and diverting lottery funds to the arts. He has drafted a law allowing museum entrance tickets to be sold through news kiosks and tobacconists, lowered afternoon cinema prices, and made the Roman forum free on Sundays.

Attendance figures at Italy's top 20 museums, headed by Pompeii and the Uffizi Gallery in Florence, have risen by an average 8 per cent. But he admits that the bureaucracy governing Italy's arts is "very entrenched, very conservative... they are suspicious of innovations that undermine their own powers." Many officials were aghast, he said, when he asked Bill Gates, the computer tycoon, if his Microsoft company would like "to get

Leaders poll low vote for dress sense

SIGNOR VELTRONI'S open-neck shirts did not win many marks this week from Romeo Gigli, the leading fashion designer. Signor Gigli was asked by the newspaper Corriere della Sera to rate the dress sense of Italy's leading politicians.

The fashion guru decreed that an open-neck white shirt looks fine with a jacket, but added: "You can only really get away with it if you are very good looking".

There were low marks, too, for Silvio Berlusconi, the leader of the Opposition, media tycoon and former Prime Minister, who prides himself on his appearance.

Signor Berlusconi, the designer said, wears too many tight-fitting, old-fashioned double-breasted suits, and even when he is in casual gear he still looks formal and over-dressed.

As for Umberto Bossi, the fiery and dishevelled leader of the separatist Northern League, Signor Gigli said "the man is a walking disaster — he wears vests and grey flannels on the beach, and his suits are terrible, as are his glasses and his watch. He even wears a key ring on his belt".

Driving's future: the great debate blessing that could ultimately become the curse of the 21st century. The machines that once liberated the well-off have become essential for millions. They have also sentenced the present genera-tion to the frustration of neverending journeys that wouse astonish the pioneers of Britain's biggest single industry.

Concerns about ill-health caused through pollution; noise, nuisance and destruction caused through road building and the relentless consumption of natural resources through making and fuelling cars have made transport a major issue for the millenium.

Today, as a General Election looms, CAR 97 launches a great debate over the future of motoring. Squaring the circle between mobility and strangulation has become a conundrum for all the major parties, and a platform for the Green lobbyists who were once regarded as tree-dwelling extremists. The car has allowed millions to

We love our cars, but traffic levels are becoming insane. This week, the Government's agenda. Next week, Labour's reply travel unheralded distances for business and holidays cheaply and quickly. But the rapid growth in motoring – from 10 million cars in 1967 to 25 million now – has condemned us all to neurosis over pollution and time wasted in traffic ams. Even the chairman of Vauxhall, one of the country's big three carmakers, is prepared to say "enough is enough" in one of me opening shots of our debate. Yesterday a Bill obliging local authorities to set limits on the growth of traffic went before the Commons. Below. Sir George Young, Transport Secretary and "bicycling baronet" sets out why he also remains a "minister for motoring". Next week Labour's Transport Spokesman, Andrew Smith, will spell out his party's policies.

The transport debate is no longer a contest between speed-freaks and obsessive Greens, it is one that confronts every mother, father, child, teacher, grandparent, employer. and anyone who wants to breathe clean air and travel with a clear conscience.

The columns of CAR 97 are dedicated to the motor car in all its wonderful variety, from the technological wizardry that makes driving so safe and simple for so many, to the glorious achievements of racers and record-breakers who provide so many of our modern heroes. Britain's motor industry today employs a million people and provides export earnings of well over £10 billion a year.

But the industry which has shown such brilliant ingenuity over the century now faces its biggest growth without suffocating in its own tumes. The problem facing Britain is that millions rely on the car because there is no viable alternative. The Lex Report on Motoring this week revealed that eight out of ten Britons could not live without their cars. Only 36 per cent said they would use the car less. if public transport was better.

After 100 years, what is the future of the car? We have invited the experts, now let us know what the ordinary motorist thinks.

To many people, I am known as the bicycling baronet I am very fond of that form of exercise and transport. But too often this sobriquet leads people to assume that I neither use nor favour other methods of transport.

Let me explode this myth right away. In last year's Green Paper on transport, I made it clear that as a country we need to switch the emphasis to improving public transport and to reduce the impact. of road freight. This we are steadily doing through the increasing success of rail privatisation and through grants to encourage more goods to go by rail rather than by road. However, none of this policy, which commands widespread support, should be interpreted as an attack on the car. It is in precisely this area that we distinguish ourselves from the wilder voices of the Labour Party and fringe movements.

Let me explode another myth - the supposed slash in the roads budget. The plans for spending dedicated to the roads programme were actually increased this year to enable us to sustain a main programme of around £6 billion, which will mean an average of three to four significant new starts a year.

While the national road network is largely complete. there remain some bottlenecks and blackspots which restrict the vital flow of our traffic. adding to congestion and pollution. We also need to make better use of the existing network and to look after it better as an important contributor to the nation's wealth.

As Conservatives, we are always concerned to maintain the right balance between the needs of business and the preservation of the environment. As steady growth in the economy continues, so we need investment in the infrastructure to carry that growth with its extra business activity, coupled with greater demand for goods and services. But we do not seek to cover our country in concrete. Let the give a couple of examples: first, on planning for major roads. At present, the way trunk roads are planned can make it difficult to take into account regional priorities and local needs, or Transport Secretary Sir George Young argues cars should not be attacked, but alternatives encouraged alternatives such as improvements to other forms of transport, or traffic management measures. The Green Paper proposed a system which would make it easier to take these considerations into account. There has been overwhelming support for this.

Secondly, we have to accept that in many cases it is simply not possible to expand the road network in line with demand: the impact on the environment would be too great. This particularly applies in towns and cities. So we have to decide how to divide available road space between all who would like to use it -cars, pedestrians, cyclists and lorries. Should part of the road be given over, for example, to a bus priority lane, which will speed buses, but may slow cars? Should cycle lanes and longer phasing for pedestrian crossing lights be allowed. which again will benefit cyclists and pedestrians at the expense of motor traffic?

Sir George Young: cars can improve the environment

car parking? The answer will vary from place to place. That is why the Green Paper has put great weight on the need for local authorities to be responsible for decisions. We need to get away from the idea of a Big Brother" state that can decide every transport question.

As a Conservative, I am not anti-motorist. The massive increase in car ownership since served for lorries and vans to the Second World War, powered by the design and engineering triumphs of manufacturers like Jaguar and Ford, has been a consequence of both higher living standards and higher aspirations. I see the car as a vehicle for increasing choice, freedom and opportunity.

Through owning a car. people can travel at a time they want, to a destination of their choice by any route they wish. Wider car ownership has meant a huge expansion in the availability of employment, particularly for disabled people, who would find it a real struggle to use public transport. Car ownership has also given people in rural areas greater access to shops. while allowing those in towns more options for leisure ars are often busi-ness tools. Just think how plumbers and carpenters would manage if denied the opportunity to use cars for carrying their equipment. Many mothers with children rely on cars to get home their heavy grocery bags.

Nowadays, many people seek to deride cars as polluting machines, taking up ever more space in our small island and using up valuable natural resources. But with the advent of more sophisticated engines, recyclable materials, and cleaner fuels, I believe cars can play a part in improving our environment for future generations.

After all, by 2005 air pollution levels from road transport are set to fall to less than half their 1990 levels in towns, as a result of tighter controls on vehicle emissions and tough measures to enforce them. It is difficult to point to many other industries that have done so much to reduce their impact on the environment.

We also need to encourage alternatives to conventional petrol and diesel vehicles with ower emissions. The Chancelfor had this aim in mind when he announced in his Budget last November tax incentives for less polluting lorries and diesel fuel. This will encourage lower particulate emissions from diesel vehicles, and also the development of alternative fuels, such as gas power.

So I say to those puritanical doom-mongers who wish to attack the car, think of what you would be denying people. At a stroke, you would take away their freedom to travel under their own steam to any destination for business or pleasure: you would isolate villages from their market towns, and you would deprive millions of the simple pleasure of driving.

I am certainly a bicycling baronet. But I remain a motor-

By now some readers may have concluded that this story is one of my occasional wind-ups. But once again, truth out-stranges liction, and I assure you that a drunk taken to a mobile police station in Gateshead could indeed find him-self encouraged to have a few more bottles of Newcastle Brown. These are rather strange developments, to say the least of it. A perfectly good case can be made for companies helping to fund the police, for they have as much of an interest in fighting crime as the rest of us. But although I per cent of budgets does not sound much. that actually amounts to £70 million throughout England and

Some critics of the scheme fear that he who pays the piper might call the tune, bringing a risk of corporate sponsors having some sway over police activities. I doubt that, but I worry about the nature of some of the sponsorship in relation to road safety.

Thresher and Newcastle Breweries happen to be established companies that do good business meeting a public need. But what they sell is alcohol, the deadliest enemy of road safety. Surely a police force intent on catching drunk drivers is sending a mixed message if it drives around in vehicles paid for by brewers?

There is no shortage of people in this society who will use any excuse to behave badly and a police vehicle advertising alcohol is just the ticket for them. One wonders what our chief constables would regard as unacceptable, if they regard drinks sponsorship as acceptable. How about motorway patrol vehicles emblazoned with adverts for performance cars? This posits the absurd spectacle of a boy racer in an Astra being pursued up the MI by a police car encouraging him to buy something even zippier. Of course none of these contro-versial matters would arise if we had a police force paid for properly out of the public purse. Michael Howard, the Home Secretary, has sanctioned advertising on police vehicles because he sees that as a way to fill the gap between what the police need and what the Government will give them.

That is a short-term gain over a long-term loss. If we are going to cover police vehicles in slogans, let them be messages not adverts. "Keep your distance" and "Take a break" are among those that should be on police cars, and the taxpayer ought to be funding them (though I suppose Kit Kat might be persuaded to sponsor the latter).

he age of the male chau-vinist driver may at last be coming to a close. sponsible for recovering millions of pounds worth of stolen cars in the last few years is set to be disbanded despite an unexpected rise in car crime.

The stolen vehicle squad covering South West London. including such high crime districts as Brixton and Streatham, is likely to be a victim of a plan to transfer officers to other duties in areas of the capital which are supposedly in more need.

The decision will leave the Metropolitan Police area, home to more than two million vehicles, with just 20 specialist officers to handle car crime.

The South West London squad, led by Det Sgt Peter Russell, has pioneered free car clinics for motorists who leared they might unwittingly have bought a stolen car or patched-up wreck. It has played a leading role in combating the increasing number of "ringers" on the roads stolen cars which have been given a new identity with licence plates, vehicle identification numbers and chassis numbers from scrapped vehicles. The squad's latest coup has been to track down this month three new BMWs stolen from a dealer in Belgium and given new registration details in Britain. Officers traced one to a motorist who had paid £25,000 in cash for a 525i without realising it was stolen. One of the squad's most famous cases, featured in The Times, involved a Volkswagen Passat which was almost form in half by an accident yet reregistered six months later. Russell and his team discovered that the man who had hought the wreck had scrapped it then re-registered and chassis number and

One senior Scotland Yard officer critical of the moves told Car 97, "Car crime appears no longer to be a central part of the Metropolitan Police Commissioner's policy. It will be increasingly difficult to find an officer trained in car crime and who can spot a ringer.

The Met will be left with one central vehicle squad giving the capital the same number of specialist officers as the Greater Manchester and West Midlands forces, which are responsible for fewer crimes.

'Approximately 100 of the 372 officers from the South West area who will be relocated have moved already. Divisional commanders will have the responsibility of deciding the most appropriate way of reducing their numbers. However their priority will be to preserve front-line policing by constables as emphasised by Sir Paul Condon, the Commissioner, in his strategy for policing London in ers are going to be offered the best possible incentive to take a few extra lessons, the chance to win a car.

The prize offer is part of a series of initiatives to cut casualties among young driv-ers, the most vulnerable group on Britain's roads. It will be a feature of a revised "Passplus" scheme which already offers insurance discounts to thuse who have just passed a test if they sign up for a special series of six extra lessons.

Bernard Herdan, chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency, says the revamped Pass-plus will be a "carrot" for young drivers to go with the stick" of the Driver Act, the law under which drivers who accumulate six or more penalty points within two years of passing the test will have to retake both the theory and practical tests. The DSA announced this week that the Driver Act would come into force from June 1.

"At present we get about 1,000 new drivers per month signing on for Pass-plus. That's quite a considerable contribution to safety but a small number when you take into account that 800,000 people a year pass the test," says Herdan.

"The extra lessons concentrate on things like motorway driving and driving at night, situations which most learners never experience until after they have passed the test. The extra lessons cost on average about £80.7 says Herdan. At present under Pass-plus, insurance companies offer a percentage discount for one year to drivers who sign up. But under the revamped scheme, the incentives will be much greater. Companies will offer Passplus drivers a one-year no-claims bonus, which should represent a saving of £100 or more per year for most young drivers, says Tony Baker, deputy director of the Association of British Insurers who has just become chairman of the Pass-plus board. The draw for a car and other prizes like holidays will be an additional encouragement to publicise the scheme much more widely," he says. "In addition, we are trying to negotiate a reduced excess for drivers who take the extra lessons." Another revision will allow young drivers to keep their entitlement to Pass-plus discounts for up to two years after they pass the test, if they cannot afford their own car

"It means if a 17-year-old passes the test in a parent's car, it is still worth signing up for Pass-plus, because if they save up and buy their own car when they are 19, they will get an immediate one year noclaims bonus," says Baker.

Mr Herdan says the Passplus incentives are a vital part of the carrot-and-stick approach. "It's a positive aspect to safety and leads to a noclaims discount which could save a driver money year after year," he says.

The Driver Act is the other side of the coin, a deterrent to youngsters who may be tempted to take risks. "In effect if they get six points on their licence they go back to zero," says Herdan. "We think this will bring tremendous peer pressure on young drivers. It's one thing to have penalty points. For them it would be a really big blow to have to go back to L-plates."

Under the Act, introduced as a Private Member's Bill by Dr Michael Clark, Tory MP for Rochford, and given Government support, drivers who are penalised in this way will be able to apply to retake tests immediately, but even if they pass, the points will remain ontheir licence for the usual period. It will come into force a traffic warden? Eve-Ann Prentice goes to Hendon to discover the tricks of their trade in the surrounding streets for ges looking for a meter, may be a ger bank manager or solicitor. et all sorts," says Baines. "I p be a print worker, then I advert seeking traffic a recruits and I have never and back. I wish I had done it 20 ago because now I look and to coming to work.

There is a misconception that all nbers of the public hate traffic rdens," says Baines, "But only a all percentage scream and shout; the vast majority understand fully that we are trying to maintain the free flow of traffic. If a motorist comes along, stops where he shouldn't and thinks whoops, here comes a traffic warden', 99 per cent will drive away and that in itself recruited as traffic wardens in London in 1961. The first women wardens patrolled the streets of Leicester from March, 1961, and were billed as issuing tickets "in the friendliest manner". But it was not until 1965 that women wardens immortalised when Paul McCartney sang his love for "Lovely Rita, meter maid - appeared in

The system governing parking tickets is undergoing a radical change with local authorities being given the option to decriminalise parking offences. And this is where the parking attendants come in. hired by councils. So far, many London boroughs and Oxford and Winchester have opted to employ their own attendants, and an unknown number of other authori-man was coy about revealing the figure: "Until they have done so, we can't say how many."

There are around 1,500 parking attendants in London. Their introduction caused uproar when Westminster became the first London borough to employ them about five years ago - and paid them bonuses if they issued more than a certain number of tickets. Now all that has changed, according to a spokesman for the Parking Committee for London, which is responsible for the attendants. They are not paid according to the number of tickets they issue. the spokesman said. That said, they are regularly appraised and the number of tickets would be taken into account. We also set parking attendants."

London's 1,400 traffic wardens, on the other hand, undergo a fiveweek training course, and one practical and two written exams to cope with ever more complex road regulations and the city's network of Red Routes.

The traffic wardens' classroom at Hendon is reached via a staircase where guns are displayed in a wall-case, presumably on a floor where less prosaic police skills are taught. A desk laden with pamphlets in the wardens' classroom gives a hint of the workings of the modern traffic warden's mind: there are manuals on law, lost and found property. bus stops, bomb awareness and interpersonal skills.

Joanne Sibthorpe, who also reaches wardens, says: "Huge changes have taken place in the

and new endorsable offences which can involve a warden asking someone to surrender their driving licence. The days of the meter maid

According to Baines, there is a "stringent selection process" for anyone wanting to join the London wardens' beat. "People who answer the advertisements are invited for a one-day selection for training," he says. They are tested on written and numerical skills, have a medical and a security check." Those who join the five-week course spend the first fortnight learning the theory, and the final three weeks out on attachment to a working traffic warden unit. About 1.5 per cent of those who embark on the course drop out, many of these because they are not keen on the uniform, according to Baines. Once qualified, annual pay rates for a 42hour working week start at £9,200. although wardens are lobbying for

Can traffic wardens show mercy if they believe an offence is being committed? "We do have discretion," says Baines, "but only until we start writing. Once the number is on a ticket, it becomes a court document and we are obliged to issue the ticket." Not that getting ticketed should be any excuse for tantrums. At the Parking Committee for London the last resort for the capital's aggrieved motorists - calm and good humour abound.

Twenty thousand people went there to appeal against parking tickets in 1995 and about half won their cases. Motorists in the rest of the country may soon have their own parking committees. The Parking Committee is undoubtedly among the most userfriendly tribunals in the country. Appellants are given appoint-ments. They sit not in a dock but across a desk from the adjudicator, they are not humiliated by arcane courtroom practice.

Hearings are held on selected days from Sam to Spm to suit most shift patterns, costs are not normally awarded and nearly everyone presents their own case.

Pattie wardens are part of the police force, have a wonderful relationship with most of the public and their main aim in life is to make life easier for all of us. At least that is what they tell you at Hendon police training college

He is under no illusions, however, of how difficult it will be to convince car users to take the bus, tram or train: When we changed the shift patterns at one of our UK plants, one of the main objections came from workers who complained that it would disrupi their car-sharing arrangements. "So, we introduced a free bus scheme to pick up staff at designated collection points. After about three months we had to cancel the service because there were only two or three people on each bus." Everybody else he said was driving into work, alone, in their own cars. Despite that disappointment. Reilly hopes the Vauxhall staff who can work

"For certain staff also we would need to equip them with computer equipment, fax equipment and moderns, which is not possible for everyone." Even so, he believes it will be possible for up to 1,000 white-collar staff to spend one day a month work-

Longer term, and with a view to an increase in the use of the sort of park-and-ride schemes that Reilly looks on favourably, Vauxhall plans to concentrate on small vans and 12 and 15-seat mini-buses. Reilly says: "Vans are coming back quite strongly. With congestion in cities increasing, we believe we have to move away from the idea of one person per vehicle, and towards people movers' or vans".

Such vehicles could, he believes, play a vital role in transport systems.

CARMANT: YOUR GUIDE TO WHAT'S NEW, AND WHAT'S USED, ON THE FORECOURTS

Belting new automatics

CARS WITH automatic transmission are slower and thirster than manuals, so motoring wisdom says. Not necessarily, Roger Bell writes. Honda fitted an experimental Williams Formula One car with continuously variable transmission (CVI) — banned as technical overkill — which was faster than Damon Hill's regular six-speeder. For its production CVI, Honda claims the same performance as a manual in skilled hands and with no fuel penalty.

CVT has been around since DAF pioneered its crude (but DAF pioneered its crude (our effective) belts and pulleys arrangement in the Stylies. It came of age when labric belts were superseded by steel belts that pushed in compression (rather than tugged in tension). The new system uses pulleys that expand and con-tract in diameter to provide continuous ratio changes.

Once restricted by torque limitations to cheap, low-powered cars. CVT is now moving upmarket into the sub-medium sector. Honda's claim that its 115bhp Civic 1.6i ES is the most powerful CVT yet might be challenged by former partner Rover, which claims superior performance for its 109bhp 216SLi CVT. Subjectively there's little to

with real, engines thrumming busily at constant revs while the road speed "catches up". You soon adjust to the curiousmonotopous drone Ally monotonous arone. Authough Rover claims better performance, the Civic feels the livelier car, especially with the selector in S (for sport) to lower the gearing and raise the revs. The Rover has no

THE TROUBLE with most previous CVTs is that they new-generation models are much smoother. The Rover snaps into gear a bit abruptly and pulls hard against the brakes when idling. A minor snag with the Honda is that its touch-sensitive throttle demands delicacy when parking. On the move, though, that makes these cars so quick off the mark and eager to overtake. Back off and the transmission selects overdrive, keeping fuss, noise and fuel consumption in check Both cars make excellent

much to choose between the rivals. However, the Honda's CIVIC 1.6iES extra length gives it a decisive

SALES OF personalised registration numbers topped 100,000 for the first time last year — an annual increase of 72 per cent and worth £37 million. There are still plenty of numbers left to choose from: the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency says that it has five million potential combi-nations, with 90 per cent priced at below £250. Call the clesales hotline for information, on 0181-200-6565.

■ YOU WILL notice a bathing-costume-clad youth with GOOD NEWS surfboard, lounging against the vehicle in our picture. Cynics will conclude he is a builder on an unofficial afternoon off. Actually he is posing with the new Volkswagen Caddy Pickup, which the young generation might consider to enjoy an exciting oundoor lifestyle. Why not? LOOK FOR Engine is a modest 64bhp 1.9-

PRICES of Vauxhall cars have gone up by an average 1.7 per cent, although some models - such as the Tigra, Vectra 2-litre GLS and SRi versions and Omega CD and CDX V6 models - remain the same. That means the Astra 1.6LS five-door goes up by £125 to £12,995, the Corsa 1.2LS by £220 to £8,870 and the Vectra 1.8iLS by £340 to £14,960. Subaru, Ssanyong and Isuzu models also go up in price on the road by an average £20 from February 1 because of

JEEP CHEROKEE
In America, tans wear T-shirts which read: "You wouldnt understand-it's a Jeep thing." But the "Jeep thing" is spreading. The Cherokee was launched here in 1993 and sales instantly outstripped even the manufacturer's most optimistic expectations. That tamous Jeep name, the legend born during the Second World War, and perpetuated by films such as MASH has spread the word that Jeeps are four-wheel drive machines renowned for toughness and off-road capabilities. The Cherokee is also carving a name as a more comfortable and better-performing road car then its rivals.

most famous marques in British motoring, is to live again more than 40 years after the cars disappeared from the showrooms. In the finest traditions of prestige motoring which the Lea-Francis name evokes, the new car will make not the slightest concession to modern automotive trends. Instead, the man behind the marque's rebirth, Hugh Price, is planning a seven-seat, five-and-ahalf-litre VI2 limousine priced at up to £180,000, complete with division between the chauffeur and the rear passengers, seated three abreast on a bench seat plus two fold-down jump seats.

Bulletproof glass and armourplating will be among the optional extras which, less alarmingly, will also include a cocktail cabinet.

The car will also continue the traditional method of bespoke hand-crafted building, with the aluminium bodywork made to order around a separate chassis. Fittings will be of stainless steel. with contrasting wood veneers and fabrics such as leather upholstery and wool headcloth. The various versions to be offered will include Landaulette and Sedanca de Ville. For those who want to design their own car, Lea-Francis will supply a separate chassis upon which customers can fit bodywork.

Standard equipment will include power steering, anti-lock brakes, self-levelling suspension and dual-control air conditioning so that those in the front and rear compartments can each set their own levels of comfort.

e Lea Francis lirm began life in the last century building high class" bicycles, and the marque celebrated its centenary in 1995. The transition from leg-powered two-wheelers to engine-powered four-wheelers came in 1903 when the first Lea-Francis motor car took to the nation's then empty roads - a year before Rover and Rolls-Royce staged their automotive debuts.

The company established itself as a maker of medium-sized sports ourers with the emphasis on prestige, but was soon also building larger four-door saloons. A major technological advance came in 1927 with the launch of the Lea-Francis Hyper, the first supercharged car produced for the British market, which enjoyed much success on the racetrack.

The company's dedication to innovation continued, and a decade after the arrival of the Hyper. Lea-Francis introduced the most efficient engine of any car in the British market. The years following the Second World War. however, hit British car builders hard. Lea-Francis was no exception. Serious production of cars ceased in 1953. That was not the death of the Lea-Francis name however; almost a decade after the vehicles ceased to be built, the firm's stock and spare parts, plus the name, were bought by Hugh

Price's commitment to the Lea-Francis is such that he built a handful of Lea-Francis Ace of Spades cars, a 3.5-litre two-door coupé which blended modern automobile technology with grand tourer styling reminiscent of pre-further, and the Warwickshirebased Lea-Francis Cars firm has joined forces with the highly regarded Park Sheet Metal Company, known for its skill in bespoke car-body building, to make the Lea-Francis live again with the planned limousine.

However commendable the dream though, are the commercial hopes for such a car in today's motoring world not a little on the thin side? Mr Price's son Barrie thinks not: "We believe that, from our collective experience of the limousine market, and discussions with a sample of potential clients. we can set a target net price of £160,000 to £180,000, intended to generate initial sales of between 15 and 20 cars a year." Hugh Price says: "The use of separate chassis allows for maxi-mum flexibility of coachwork design, and orders for open or semiopen styles can be accommodated without major structural change." Hugh Price believes that the demise of classic, prestigious and downright large limousines like the Daimler and the Rolls-Royce Phantom VI has left an opportunity in a select niche market. This is a car that we will engineer to meet the customer's individual requirements," he says. We are convinced that there is a market for these cars. At Lea-Francis Cars we already have a lot of experience in the repair and restoration of Rolls-Royce cars for example, including work on the Phantom VI belonging to the Corporation of London.

demand for such cars for ceremonial uses, especially one that offers the sort of headroom that modern imousines cannot. Also, in an age where people are happy to hire a Ferrari for £400 a day, I am convinced that people, perhaps taking a party to Henleyant Ascot, would like the chance to hire a car.

like the Lea-Francis limousine."

Mr Price hopes the commercial possibilities of the car, as well the glamour and heritage of the Lea-Francis name, will enfice investors into helping make it a reality sconer rather than later. "Production of the car hangs on us trying to attract investment from outside. If we can gather a small amount of support we can try to have the first car ready in two years' time."

CAR...TOONS

ITS THE LAST TIME I DO A CAR AD

The hot hatch returns with an extra surprise for boy racers: it's a Citroën,

says Alan Copps

hink of a fast supermini and the names which spring to mind are Ford Fiesta, Volkswagen Polo or Peugeot 106. Somehow the name of Peugeot's sister company Citroën doesn't figure on the hot-hatch agenda, until now. The hottest mini in town is now a Citroën. The VTS version of the Saxo, introduced last year as successor to the long-serving AX, gets from 0 to 60mph in just 7.2 seconds, that's a second faster than the 106GTi and faster than is a claimed 127mph.

And the next-fastest mini on the market? Well that's probably the slightly slower Saxo VTR which takes 9.3 seconds to reach 60 mph, still faster than either the 16-valve Polo or Fiesta Si.

any Jaguar saloon except the supercharged version. Top speed

These new Citroëns are the answer to the prayers of those who lament the demise of the hot hatch, the souped-up minis be-loved of boy racers of the 1980s, who bought them or, too often sadly dispensed with the formality of handing over money, thus contributing to their near extinction by punitive insurance rates a

Thanks largely to improved security and safety equipment the hot hatch is beginning to make a comeback. But the Citroen Saxo is an unlikely contender to find at the top of the class. In its more basic form, the Saxo is a pleasant little car perfect for town, its light and precise power-assisted steering provides maximum assistance at ow speeds and makes parking especially easy. Its ride lives up to Citroen's reputation for ironing out the bumps.

It doesn't offer the looks or interior refinement of rivals like the Fiesta or Polo, but nor is it as quirky as Citroens once were. If that makes it less-appealing to the die-hard enthusiast who thinks all Citroëns should be like the big ones and float along on hydropneumatic cushions, it also makes it more effective and surprising as a small wolf in sheep's clothing.

rom the outside, both the VTS and the VTR are lower and squatter than the regular Saxo. Flared wheel arches and alloy wheels are enough to indicate their sporty nature to those in the know, although there is nothing flashy about the exterior and the badging is positively discreet. A wider track offers greater stability and gives the handling utter predictability even at high speed without making the ride too harsh. It is several degrees firmer than the standard car, but in a model that can be driven with a great deal more enthusiasm the extra feedback from the road is needed.

CITROEN SAXO VTS

Engine: four-cylinder, 16-valve, 1.6-litre producing 120bhp at 6,600rpm.

cycle 34.9mpg. Equipment twin airbags, anti-lock brakes, power steering, slide-and-tilt sunroof, electric windows, remote central locking, keypad immobiliser. Price: £12,620 on the road.

A few wet laps of Brands Hatch (where better to test a hot hatch?) were enough to establish the VTS's credentials as a spirited performer. The 16-valve 1.6litre engine revs freely beyond the 7,000rpm mark yet pulls smoothly from a little over 1,000rpm. It was possible to complete a lap of this tightly twisting and surprisingly hilly circuit in the rain without changing from fourth gear, but a great deal more fun to make full use of the smooth five-speed change and keep up the revs.

Even in my relatively inexperienced hands, the car stuck to its line at speed, despite some provocative braking on the blind brow of Paddock bend. In the hands of an instructor from the circuit's race driving school we were getting round the long Clearways curve at 95mph. The VTR, with its 8-valve engine giving 90bhp at 5,600rpm, is not quite so entertaining as the free-revving 16valve but still provides a claimed top speed of 116mph. On the road both these hot hatches are just as well mannered as lower-powered versions engine responds rapidly to the demands of cornering and overtaking.

from automatics and frugal die-sels to these speedy little cars likely to appeal to much younger But the rejuvenated hot hatch has grown up. These cars boast a level of equipment, safety and security that is well in excess of the spartan GTis of a previous

Hall knew those speed cameras were a ploy to wheedle money out of poor motorists. Now we discover the police can't afford to run them. Good — serves 'em right.

Actually the cameras have done their job. Actually the cameras nave been reduced by up to a third on some roads, saving the accident and emergency services millions of pounds. So they were not so bogus, after all.

Fair enough. But why can't the police afford to run them when they have been nabbing drivers for £40 fines each time? That must be worth a fortune.

Around £30 million a year — but the police don't get the cash. That goes direct to the Treasury, so it's a nice little earner for the Government, not the boys in blue, who only administer the £27,000 machines.

Will the Government lose money if the police switch off the cameras or raise the limits at which they record speeders?

It might happen, because the police cannot afford to process the paperwork. The cameras were so successful that prosecutions jumped from 156,000 in 1995 to more than 255,000 last year. Thank God the film didn't go to Boots for processing or you might never have your holiday snaps back.

Does that mean we are still not slowing down, even when we know that these cameras are halefully staring at us?

Apparently not. Drivers have a strange attitude to speeding, as this week's Lex Report on Motoring showed. More than half the people questioned believe there should be more cameras, with four in ten wanting police to charge on the spot fines. Contrast that hard line with findings that a third of drivers don't bother to slow down even when they see a speed camera. Presumably, they beam a wide smile for the flashlight as they hurtle past. Another third slow down in range — and then bang the throttle down again.

See what you mean. And this bad behaviour and double-standard motoring will get worse, do you think?

Bad enough already. Lex showed nothing happened to 66 per cent of motorists who were caught on camera and another 13 per cent in the survey received notification but were not followed up. Maybe the tight-fisted Treasury should hand over some of their illgotten gains from motorists back to the police to keep the cameras flashing.
